

Because of my fourteen years in Egypt, I wasted no breath in swearing delously at the flies as I brushed them from my face; nor did I look with such horror as I would once have felt, but perhaps with a little envy, at a native boy of five or six, lying perfectly naked in the sun and making no movement of discomfort as the swarming pests buzzed about his bare skin or even dragged their dampened feet over his staring eyeballs. But for my more sensitive nerves. I was as happy as he for the inundation was over for the year, there had been no breaks or bungling in my district upon the canals of His Highness, the Khedive, my report was ready to file with the chief engineer, and I was thinking of a Christmas at home, the first in four years, not as one thinks in Europe, the blood coursing quicker as fancy's call, but idly and dreamily.

A queer bit of stone with heathen carvings traced upon it I held in my hand, as I sat in the shade of my tent flap, had led my idle thoughts across all those miles of sea and land to green England.

"I wonder if Arthur will care for this scarab," I was thinking; "he must be as big as I am by this time. Four years ago he was mightly interested in all that I could tell him of ancient Egypt. And that was little enough, poor fellow! How disgusted he was when I confessed that, after ten years in Egypt and many months in Cairo, I had never gone a mile out of my way to see the Pyramids!"

For my concern has always been with the land of today and not of yesterday. Of Arable I know enough to direct my men and even to write a tolerable letter. But of the tombs and temples and the strange characters chiseled on them to record the lying boasts of crowned slave-drivers of the past, I knew and yet know nothing.

Still, even my eyes were shrewd enough to see that it was no ordinary pebble my donkey's hoof had unearthed from a claybank that morning. It was an oval bit of black Tanis granite, rounded to an exquisite smoothness. It was, as nearly as I can remember, about two inches in length, an inch and s half wide, and an inch or less in thickness. Across each of the flattened sides were drawn lines, and between the lines were cut rows of hieroglyphic characters. Their meaning I could not guess, but I saw that there were represented a dog, or some other beast, a metal mirror, such as my men often dug up in the ruins of great cites now clothed with wheat stalks; a bit of board with seven pegs in it, at eye with its eyeball rudely traced, and other designs less suggestive of any

It was while I sat examining the tone, which I purposed adding to the little store of such trifles I had saved for my son, that I saw All, son of Hasan, my dragoman, eyeing me with a strange gaze I had never seen in his eyes before, and which made me uneasy in a way that I could not uite explain, Twelve years All Hasan had been with me, and that he loved me like a brother I knew then as well as I know now, For it is a strange thing. this life in the east, where men live side

"Here's a rum go," muttered Arthur, whence I perceived that he was puzzled. Then he raised his voice, and I was picased to see that he could already give the words of command in the Arabian tongue: "Ta turgeman, ta 'ala beneh!"

"Ana gai, Ta Sidi," said the new dragoman who had taken Ali's place, as he entered the room. And presently, when he knew what was required, he unearthed from beneath some litter of the gamp the mystic stone which had lain forgotten since the day I was struck down.

making use of the name of a young Scotch engineer who had been expected in camp about the time I found the dark scarab. But my voice sounded strangely weak, and my tongue had a way of falling about in my mouth that was new to me,

"It's a shocking old dad not to know voice; "but never you mind. You've been jolly well knocked out, you know, but you're as right as need be now. So be off with you to sleep again."

And I obeyed and dreamed that Arhur wore upon his brow the globe and serpent and held in his hand the whip and scepter of Ammon Ra, who must be obeyed. My big hands have a firm grip, and,

strong enough to talk it all over with | to the east. And with a muttered exmy son. A fine, well-grown lad he was, and quick and merry. "Awfully obliging of you, dad," said he, as he sat by the bedside, holding my gaunt hand in his. "I've wished to come to Egypt for a long time, and your ore head gave me such a jolly excuse Sorry you can't smoke, too, but you'll be up to it in no time. And you haven't read the papers much while the crocodiles were chasing you, so I'll construc a few lines out of the Egyptian Times. of date a month or so ago. me a face which I knew and yet did not used sometimes to take out the heart and put in its place a smooth stone "Is this Mr. MacDougail?" I asked, like this, about the same size. These hieroglyphics, now, must be the name and fastive old bounder who wore it. Hm! My Egyptian is a little rusty, but that feather sign is 'a' and the chessboard with the drunken sailor's line of march under it is 'men'-some name beginning with 'Amen;' and the queer animal is his own son," said a fresh, young the sign of the god Set. Oh. I can dig voice; "but never you mind. You've it all out with the help of a pony." And there, my word for it, was that slip of a boy I had dandled on my knees reading off the syllables from a stone thousands of years old, as if it were yesterday's paper. I almost regretted that I was not myself more of a scholar as I lay propped up on my pillows watching him. Then all at once I saw his face take on a queer look that I did not like, having seen it worn by many a bright young fellow offered up like a sacrince

cuse which I klid not catch, he left the Nor could I anywhere see the heart (To Be Concluded.)
