DANGER FROM COAL GAS.

Narrow Escape of the Family of James F. Maxwell.

Serious results from coal gas came to the family of James F. Maxwell on moved to their new home at the corner of Seventh avenue and Park street. On Tuesday night large quantities of coal gas escaped from the kitchen stove and filled the rooms above. The daughters, Misses Mame and Marcella, were seriously affected, and with difficulty left their rooms. Reaching the open air they each were for a time

Dr. Shields was summoned and found them much prostrated and during the day they suffered great pain. Their escape from death was quite narrow, and they still feel the effects of the polsonous air.

It was the desire of the bride and bridegroom to keep books for him. have a quiet wedding, therefore only a few of their nearest relatives were invited.

At just five minutes of 8 the last invited guest arrived, and promptly at 8 a clock the wedding party marched into the spacious parlors, preceded by Stanley Reynolds as best man. and Miss Mabel Reynolds as brides-maid, and took their position beneath an arch of evergreens and Easter lilies. Rev. M. J. Watkins, of the Bap-tist church, read the wedding services and said the words that pronounced them man and wife. The bride was attired in a delicate same green traveling suit and carried a boquet of pink tea roses. The bridesmaid wore a delicate pink gown, trimmed with swansdown and carried roses.

The decorations were elaborate and very tastefully arranged, and consisted of poted palms, ferns, Easter illies, evergreens, etc.

After congratulations were extended the doors of the spacious dining room was opened, where a sumptuous and inviting wedding supper was served the guests. The presents were not large in number on account of the limited number of guests invited, but were handsome and artistic. Among the presents as tokens of esteem, we no-Mr. and Mrs. C. D.
