Great Objector Succumbs to Spinal Meningitis--Had Filled Many Places in Nation and State.

Washington, April 22--Representative Holman, of Indiana, died at his home here at 2.05 p. m., after an illness of some weeks. Spinal meningitis was the cause.

William Steele Holman, best known as "The Great Objector," member of congress from the Fourth congressional district of Indiana, was born in Dearborn county, that state, in 1822. For a time he studied at Franklin college, but left that institution without graduating. After a few years spent as a district school teacher he took up the study of law, and later became judge of the court of probate. From that position he was elected to congress as a Democrat in 1872. He served longer in the house of representatives than any other man in the history of the government, though his services had not been consecutive.

Throughout Judge Holman's congressional career he had been one of the most radical of the Democratic leaders. He was a staunch exponent of the old-fashioned Democratic Jeffersonian simplicity, and opposed to every new political innovation, he gained for himself the title of the "Great Objector."

As chairman of the committee on appropriation he vigorously opposed all bills which increased the appropriation of government money. Sometimes preventing the much needed expenditure of the public money.

Judge Holman, as he was familiarly known among his constituents, was a man of far-reaching influence, keen, unassuming and gentle. He was always generous and consequently popular. In 1882 he married Miss Abigail Knapp, who has borne him one son and one daughter, both living. While in Washington the residence of the Holmans was at the Hamilton.

TWO CHILDREN ARE POISONED

Died in Agony After Eating What They Thought Was Candy.

CORONER IS INVESTIGATING

Proposes to Find Out Where the Poison Came From.

The Death of Freddie and Annie Stachel Increases to Seven the Number of Children Who Have Died During the Year Hereabouts After Eating Poison That Had Been Carelessly Disposed Of--Sad Circumstances Surrounding the Death of the Stachel Children--Expired in Frightful Agony.

Two more children were yesterday added to the list of victims of the criminally careless practice of throwing poison about in exposed places, making seven in all, within a short space of time for whose agonizing deaths these thoughtless and negligent persons are, to say the least, indirectly responsible.

These latest victims are Freddie and Annie Stachel, aged respectively 5 and 3 years, children of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Stachel, who live at the rear of 615 Prospect avenue.

Wednesday afternoon the little ones, in company with a number of other children, were playing about the yard between the Stachel home and the residence of the fronting Prospect avenue, summing in a pile of rubbish they came across a box, which presumably had contained some insect poison, and the two Stachel children ate some of the concoction, which clung to the sides and bottom, thinking it was candy. A neighbor whose attention was attracted to the Stachel boy sitting something apparently distasteful out of his mouth, hurried over to the group, and discovering what had occurred, gave the alarm.

Antidotes and emetics were hastily administered and Drs. A. J. Kolb and J. J. Walsh summoned. The girl, who had eaten a teaspoonful of the stuff, was taken sick immediately, and nothing could ease her suffering. She died at 9 o'clock in the most intense pain. The boy, who had swallowed only a small amount of the poison, did not develop any serious symptoms until nearly midnight, but once the deadly stuff began to work his suffering began and continued scarcely without abatement until 10 o'clock yesterday morning, when death relieved him.

AN INQUEST HELD.

Coroner Longstreet was notified of the case at once and proceeded to investigate. He empaneled a jury and after they had viewed the scene, he conducted a most thorough examination with the assistance of Doctors Kolb and Walsh. The stomachs of both children were removed and will be examined by Chemist Benjamin. No testimony was taken as the coroner thought it better to wait until the excitement subsided, that he may make a more thorough and searching investigation.

The symptoms, the coroner says, indicate that phosphorus was the main ingredient of the poison. The investigation was so thorough that the bowls were telescoped in four places in the case of the girl and two in the case of boy. In the opinion of the coroner the suffering of the little ones must have been terrible. The reason why which the children ate the poison had some streaks of the substance still clinging to it and its appearance bears out the presumption that it was phosphorus. It is expected that the box will be discovered before the inquest is over.

The people of the neighborhood in which the sad affair occurred are highly indignant over the matter but it is probable that their indignation is not much greater than that of the coroner. When seen last night at his office on Wyoming avenue he expressed himself in unreserved terms over what he termed an unquestionably crime and outrage.

The coroner's inquest in putting poison in the way of children has to be checked and I propose to make a supreme effort to check it right here. When the poisoning near the Oral school took place I was disposed to prosecute the offender, but the friends of the victims did not desire it and out of deference to their wishes I desisted, feeling that the warning would have a result quite as efficacious as a prosecution. I don't propose to allow anything to restrain me from doing what I consider in my whole duty again. I will go to the bottom of this case and will make an example of the perpetrator of this inexcusable negligence if I can fasten the deed upon any one."

MAKES SIX VICTIMS.

This makes six children who have within the past year, in this county, lost their lives through this same criminal negligence. In every case the circumstances are almost similar.

In December Almira Hadsall, 15 years of age, of "World's End," back of Rensselaer, died in terrible convulsions. It was reported at first that she had been frightened to death by a gang of Italian wood-choppers who had a grudge against her father because he in his capacity as a watchman prevented them from cutting timber from the company lands at that place. A younger sister who was in the house when Almira went into convulsions told of a crowd of fence looking men peering through the window and this drew the conclusion that fright was the cause of death.

Two weeks later, however, when two
