The speaker evoked applause from the Democrats and laughter from the Republican colleagues by an assertion that at this time when the "advance agents of prosperity" have not yet come around the people cannot afford to pay any more taxes. "That's right, tell the truth," cried a Democratic member. THOSE EARNED RUNS.

cusses the Troublesome Rules.

President Young has this to add to als ruling of an earned run: "Mr. Hough, of the Philadelphia Enquirer, in his criticism of the earned run takes as an instance a three-base hit by Delehanty. That is, Delehanty reaches third and scores on an out. Mr. Hough is perfectly right in his construction of the rule. Delehanty does not score an earned run by coming home on the out. But if a hit follows the out Delehanty's run is earned, providing, of course, all fielding chances have been accepted.

"I want to call the attention of the scorers to another point. If a batsman makes a two-base hit and steals to third and a hit follows, his run is earned, because he would have scored on the hit, if the hit was clean enough to advance the runner from second to home. Of course this point lies with the judgment of the scorer. One point advanced by a Western writer is manifestly absurd. He holds that a run should be scored as earned if four men reach their bases on balls in succession and one man is forced home. A run scored and such a misplay is obviously a battery error, and how can you possibly score it as earned,"

In an experiment with a military bicycle in France, a zouzve rode at a rate of twelve miles an hour, went through his art in a sham battle, then folded his machine compactly, placed it on his back, scaled an S-foot wall with a ladder, fired his gun repeatedly on the other side, un-folded his bicycle and rode off.
