MUSICAL NOTES.

There is some humor in the story that Frau Wagner the other day wrote an odd letters to Hans Richter in which she said that she had met Brahms only once. She believed he was perhaps little interested in Wagner's works, but that "his character was too noble to allow any hostility to appear." As regards Brahms' writings, she said that of all his famous works she had only heard one—a chamber musi-piece. The coupling of the complaint thu Brahms was not sufficiently interested in Wagner's music with the naive confession that she had never taken the pains to hear more than one of his works is really
