While every Endeavorer in California will do his utmost to make the Eastern visitors feel that they are most welome on the Pacific coast during their stay, yet upon the reception committee. numbering over nine hundred members, led by a staff of thirty-five, officially devolves the duty of giving attention to this matter. The ladies and gentlemen of this committee will wear white caps with purple band and the designation "Reception Aid." Those of the executive staff will have extra bands over the tops. These caps will be worn both indoors and out.

The railroad section will meet dele gates coming by the northern and central routes at Sacramento, about on hundred miles, and on the southern routes at Fresno, about two hundred miles from San Francisco. At both of these cities a large local reception committee will be in waiting, and delegates may alight from the train, and get a foregleam of the welcome awaiting them in the convention city. When the trains proceed, they will be accompanied by members of the reception mmittee for the purpose of giving any desired information. All necessary data will '- collected and wired on to headquarters so that all may be in readiness for their comfort.

At Oakland they will be taken in charge by the Alamenda county Endeavorers, who will be on duty at Sixeenth street station and the Oakland Mole, to direct and escort the arrivals aboard the ferries and across the bay, when they will be given over to the charge of the station section, which will escort them in parties to the headquarters at the Pavilion. This section will also have charge of the Valencia street station, the Tiburon and Sausalito Ferries, to receive the local coast delegates. The wharf section, assisted by the Floating society of Alamenda county, will receive Endeavorers coming by steamboat at the several harves, and will escort them to the Favilion headquarters.

The headquarters section will have charge, as its name implies, of the beadquarters, all of which will be located in the Mechanics' Pavilion. It will be the duty of those serving here to receive the delegates as they arrive from the stations and wharves, to give them a hearty welcome, to assist them to register, to be prepared to answer any and all questions promptly and correctly, and, to do everything possible to give them a most cordial re-In order to facilitate the work of this section and prevent any from being deprived of attending the meetings, those serving will be divided into three shifts-the morning, afternoon and night. There will be twenty-six headquarters for states in addition to the California headquarters. In each of these will be stationed memters of the reception committee, who will be in constant attendance. In addition to the foregoies, there will be reading, writing, resting, correspond-ence and cloak rooms, branch postemergency hospital, bureau of tion. Sunday School Lesson for June 27.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.

By REV. J. E. GILBERT, D. D., LL. D. Secretary of the American Society of Religious Education.

have passed before us in the lessons of the quarter-Peter, Paul and James. These represent the three sections of the Christian church, or the three different conceptions of the Gospel and of its rela-tions to the world. James was the head of the mother church at Jerusalem, a splendid exponent of Jewish Christian-ity, highly esteemed on account of his character. Paul, made an apostle by the Spirit after the ascension, stood for Gen-tle Christianity; while Peter, permitted to preach the Pentecostal sermon, has been regarded by many as a compromise between these two wings of the church, and styled "the leader of Middle Christ-lanity." Eight of the lessons are his-toric, covering those chief events which marked the steady progress of Christ's kingdom from A. D. 37 to A. D. 47, a period of ten years. The other four lessons are doctrival, pertaining to matters that agitated the church and needed to be settled, not for those years only, but for all after years. The history and the doctrine are intimately connected.

MIRACLES.-We are still in the period of the supernatural. Shortly the Gospel will be left to win its own way, needing only to be proclaimed. For a time dis-plays of Divine power will arrest attention, approve the preschers, and authenticate the message. We have had two lessons on miracles, the first and the fourth. Both of them involved Peter, and in substantially the same manner as the two miracles last quarter. One of them represented him as working, in his ministry at Lydda and Joppa, raising the dead and curing the paralytic, while the other made him the object of God's carothus giving the active side of the believer's life. Under two heads fall most of the miracles of the New Testament. They all have a benevolent design, seeking to clothe a servant of God with authority and make him a blessing to others. An instantaneous impartation of strength to a good man or a direct interposition to save him from enemies-surely these are not incredible acts of the Almighty.

CONVERSIONS.—The great business of the spostles was to make converts to Christ. (Mark avi. 15). The inspired sketch of their doings would be incom-plete did it not record something of their success in this direction. One lesson, the second, gives an account of a most no-table conversion. That account is the more interesting because it mentions the first instance of a Gentlie who received the Gospel, and he a Roman centurion, liv-ing at Caesarea, the political capital of the province. All the circumstances, the vision of Peter and Cornelius, were cal-culated to make the church know that culated to make the church know that Christianity was not to be confined to the Jews. We have no other mention of an individual conversion in the lessons of the quarter, but lessons three, six and seven indicate that large number of people believed in Jesus and joined the church. These last are entered as showing the spread of the kingdom, and the success of the ministry, rather than as naming important persons who espoused naming important persons who espoused

INTRODUCTION .- Three great men | missionary movement and the early work | JUDGMENT .- Out of the common pracprosceuted in connection with 1. Antioch had the honor of being the place of departure. There, after prayer, three men, Paul, Barnabas and Mark, went forth journeying westward. The history may be found in lessons five, six and seven. heathen, now st bjected to the infamous rule of the Turk. They preached in Sarule of the Turk. They preached in Salamis, Paphos, Perga, Antioch, Iconium, Derbe, Lystra and other cities. Converts were made, both of Jews and Gentiles. and little congregations with a very simple government were established in many places. This first missionary tour accomplished much for the cause of Christianity. It spread the area of the Gos-pel, established new centers, achieved victories over error, displayed the spirit of self-denial and heroism, opened the eyes of Paul to the need of the world, enlarged his conceptions of the purpose and plan of Christ, awakened the hope of the DISPUTES .- It is impossible for men to think alike on any subject. Differences of opinion are most likely to arise among those who diligently seek for the truth and eartestly stand by their convictions. It was therefore to be expected that in the early years of the church doctrinal questions would arise and provoke disussion. Those who had been Jews could not agree with those who had been Gen-tiles. The more honest men were the greater their liability to contention. The lessons of the quarter present three sub-jects about which there was a dispute. Lesson three treated the resurrection, over which Sadducees and Pharisees had wrangled, transferring their views to the Christian church. Lesson eight pertained to the Jewish ceremonial, wheth-er Christians were obligated to keep it, especially circumcision. Lesson nine set-tled the controverted point of faith and works, growing out of the divergent views of the Pauline and Jerusalem schools of thought, when pushed to extreme and bringing them eventually into happy accord. A future life, an interior life points established. SPEAKING.—Lesson ten, "The Sins of the Tongue," referred to a practice into which the eastern world had generally fallen, from which James desired to protect Christians. Our expression for June 6 opened the subject fully, requiring here only a few words in review. As already shown the great purpose of the Gospei was to promote a right state of heart, to be made manifest by appropriate liv-ing. But the pride of intellect was so great that many were indifferent both to their affections and conduct. Accord-ingly the craze for public speaking had ecome well-nigh universal, and the atviduals to assume the attitude of teacher even in private circles. This they did even while their speech revealed the de-pravity of their natures. It was a most pravity of their natures. It was a most praiseworthy undertaking, therefore, when the apostle sought to convince the disciples that they ought to be more anxious for genuine goodness, and to curb their tongues by purifying their hearts.

presumed to condemn those who did not accept these ideas. In lesson twelve we have Paul's effort to correct this fault, The countries visited were Cyprus, Pam- as James had endeavored to correct the phylia, Pisidia and Lycaonia, sections other. If the latter would have men less then cursed by the abominations of the other. If the latter would have men less concerned about opinion than goodness the former would prevent the church from becoming a place of censorship and criticism. Paul would have believers remember that each man is amenable to Christ, that eating of meat offered to idols and the observance of a sacred day, are matters to be determined by each man's conscience. And yet, he counsely against those practices which would wound the feelings of others. That pas-sage in Romans was opportune. If heeled the church at the Imperial City would quickly learn the great lesson of charity
-the duty of one party to refrain from judgment, the duty of the other party, so to live as not to provoke julgment.

> COUNSEL.-Lessen eleven contains the advice of Paul to Timothy, delivered toward the close of the former's career one being in Rome, the other Ephesus, separated by more than a thousand miles, great seas intervening. We learned the relations subsisting between the two and the estimate of the elder for the younger, growing partly out of his qualities of And we read with much interest the exhortation of the apostle in which he urges Timothy to faithfulness in his office, assuring him that the Scriptures were a sufficient furnishing for every ministerial function, so shutting out the vagaries that might arise through the speculations of meg. But this lesson is ohiefly interesting because it shows the method by which Christianity was perpetuated. The workers grow old and die, but ere they depart they deliver to those who remain the solemn charge to carry forward the work. From generation to generation the trust is transmitted. Let each be faithful to that which is committed. (II Tim. I, 14).

> CONCLUSION .- One truth appears in all the lessons of the quarter—the Holy Ghost was the efficient agent, using men to build the church after a foreseen pattern. The miracles wrought by Peter Lydda and Joppa, the conversion of Cor-nelius, the sending out of Paul and Barnabas, their bold preaching at Japhos to the discomfiture of the sorcerer, their travels from city to city, the utterances in defense of sound doctrine, the teaching of Christian propriety and duty, the final charge to an evangelist to continue steadfast in the truth-all this was through the inspiration, guidance and power of the Spirit of God. The apostolic church was not a human but a Divine institution-it was not an evolution from Jewish ritualism and Greek philosophy, as some claim, but it was
