BANK BUILDING INSPECTED.

Remodelled Apartments Are Thrown

Open to the Public. Today the business of the West Side bank will be conducted in their new quarters. The alterations which have been going on for several weeks under the direction of Contractor William R. Williams were completed last week, and yesterday the bank officials threw open the doors for a public inspection. The bank was visited by a large number of the West Siders, and the appearance and completeness of the place received many encomiums.

The approach hitherto on the second floor is now made from the sidewalk level. The main room is finished in dark walnut and divided into the usual compartments. On entering the patron steps into the waiting room. On the right and next the large front window is the cashier's room. The recelving teller's caged compartment is next, and joined by the bookkeeper's days. quarters. Into this room the vaults, two in number, and of a substantial nature, open. Passing from the waiting room, you enter a private room, plloted to the use of ladies. In the rear of the vault is the board of directors room. This room is finished in quartered-oak, with furniture to match. The floor is covered with linelium of n pretty pattern. The walls and cellings throughout are painted with a light tinted coloring, which adds to the lightness and brightness of the effect. The ceilings are bordered with artistic fresco designs in stucco, and the rooms are lighted by gas and incandescent lights. The whole effect was increased by the presence of potted palms, vases of cut Howers, flowering plants, etc.
