Paul at Thessalonica and Berea.

Acts XVII., 1-12.

BY J. E. GILBERT, D. D., LL. D., Secretary of American Society of Religious Education.

er the earthquake the authorities learning what had transpired during the night ordered the release of Paul and Silas But they, on receiving the word, refused to be dismissed in that manner. They announced their citizenship and claimed that the whole proceeding of the previous day had been contrary to Roman law and a violation of their rights. They cemanded, moreover, that the magistrates should make amends for their wrong-doing by appearing in person at the prison and conducting them in safety and honor into the public street. This was done with all haste and gentleness, thereby removing any odlum which might have been attached to the missionaries through the the prison Paul and Silas re-entered the house of Lydia, where for some time they nstructed and comforted the believers who assembled, among whom probably were the members of the jailer's household. (Acts xvi, 35-40). And so it appears that the afflictive events of last week's lesson resulted in good, (II Cor.

JOURNEY.-A good beginning having been made at Philippi, two families (one Jewish and one heathen), and perhaps a score of individuals having been re-ceived into the church, Paul and Silas de-parted for a new field of labor. Proceedng westward and crossing the base of he Chalcidic peninsula they came to the seautiful town of Amphipolis on the edge of a plain of boundless fertility. Although Herodotus and Livy had made this place amous the apostles hastened through it o Apollonia, as the name implies, dedi-ated to Apollo. They may have rested ver night and they might have paused to visit the tomb of Euripides near by or to ook on the placid waters of Lake Bolbe, ut, so carnest were they to be about their Master's business, they delayed not but proceeded to Thessalonica, (Verse 1). This city now called Salonica, one hunired and fifty miles from Philippi, was lo-ated at the head of the Thermaic gulf. The Roman capital of Macedonia, second ind Corinth, Thessalonica was selected by the spostles as a new center of work for Christ,

TEACHING.-There was a synogogue of the Jews in Thessalonica, many of the posterity of Abraham being attracted there to trade. This house of worship furnished Paul an audience, and he went after his usual custom on the Sabbath into the assemblies of the people. Fresh as he was from peril and pain of his Philippian experience he might have been of the Scriptures (verse 2). And that he did for three successive weeks. The substance of his argument was the same as stance of his argument was the same as that of the Loud himself on the way to Emmaus. (Luke xxiv, 25). It involved two great propositions—that the Christ foretold in Scripture must die and rise again, and that Jesus was the Christ. he secred writings, as the final author-

CONVERTS.-That is the true way to win men, indeed, the only way. (Mark xvi, 15). Harangues and manipulations may attract a crowd and produce an excitement, but the truth is the only instru-ment that can be wielded in the capture and regeneration of a soul. (John vill, 32). Paul's Scripture, set in logical order, was convincing. Two classes of persons be-lieved—some of the Jews and a multitude of the Greek proselytes. (Verse 4.) It appears that the latter were more numerous. They might have been more open to conviction. The Helenic mind was less trammelled than the Israelitish, better ing any odlum which might have been qualified to judge dispassionately any attached to the missionaries through the great popular concern. Among the conof representative families. Here as on other occasions, notably at Philippi, the Gospel began to win its way into the social system by securing the endorsement of women. Unless wives and mothers em-brace the faith its progress will be slow and uncertain.

> UPROAR .- It was hardly to be expect ed that Paul would be allowed to pursue his ministry unmolested at Thessalonica. Jealous because the abhorred preaching of a crucified Messiah should win adherents rom those who had long been taught the aws of Moses, furious, above all, to see hemselves deprived of the resources of the leading women, those of the Jews who did not believe formed an alliance with the lowest dregs of the populace, In those days, much more than now, and now to an alarming extent, there were loafers and loiterers who lived on the doles of the wealthy, ready for slight compen-sation to do any dirty work. Engaging these roughs and scoundrels, the Jews incited a mob and set the entire city in an uproar. (Verse 5). There was nothing new in this. The same kind of opposition was encountered at Antioch in Pisidia. (Acts xii, 59). It was an expression of that narrow bigotry and wicked intoler-ance which characterized the age. In this riot the only charge brought against Paul and Silas was that they had "turned the world upside down" (vetse 6), a charge that, however intended, contained the truth. (Ezek, xxi, 27).

house of Jason where Paul and Silas were guests, with the intention of bringing them forth to the people. Failing to find the apostles they selzed Jacon the apostles they seized Jason and brought him before the rulers of the city (verses 6 and 7). There they set up a clamor, saying that he had committed a grave misdemeanor in harboring the minexcused from immediate service, but nothing dampened his zeal. With undiminished force and courage he reasoned out Jesus was king. On the face of it the ar-jof God. The believers at Thessalonica good behavior (verses 8 and F), he was diswhich were preserved by the American and fell into many consequent impropris consul and deposited in the British mus-sum where they may now be seen. On (Verse 3). The opening up of that theme would employ many passages as proof texts. Both Paul and his hearers honored by seven men. Among them appear the in which it is deposited. (Matt. xiii, 19ty in matters of faith, precisely as Jesus who with Jason probably became Christ- materials of which they are composed.

21-23). ESCAPE.-On the release of Jason from ESCAPE.—On the release of Jason from custody the mob appears to have dispersed. The rulers doubtless interposed their authority to prevent further disturbance. That night the brethren sent Paul and Silas away. This was the second time the great apostle to the Gentiles took advantage of the darkness (Acts ix, 25), to escape his enemies. The flight was not due to cowardice, neither to unbelief. As at Phillippi, so here God could belief. As at Philippi, so here God could have protected him, and he was not the man to distrust the Almighty or to fear in the presence of danger. (Acts xxi, 13). But there are times when prudential fore-sight, or spiritual prompting, or Providential leading, demands that danger shall be avoided, as there are other times when it shall be calmly met. It was a beautiful exhibition of fraternity that prompted these new converts to provide a safe conduct out of the city, a proof that the work had been thoroughly done which made them Christians.

RECEPTION.-Paul and Silas, under the escort of the brethren, journeyed westward to Berea (verse 10), a populous and flourishing city, afterward called Irenopolis, some fifty miles from Thessalonica. It lay in a beautiful valley at the foot of Mount Bernius. Here they en-tered into the synagogue of the Jews, by whom they were very kindly received. The response to their teachings was in direct contrast with that in the last named city. The word was not only re-ceived with all readiness of mind, but the Scriptures were searched daily (verse 11). to determine the correctness of the doctrine. In so doing there was manifested the genuine spirit of learners, willing to abide by the utterances of their own sa-cred books. (Isa. xxxiv, 16). A true Jew reverenced Moses and the prophets (Luke (vi. 29), and Jesus himself rested his laims to Messiahship upon the testim of the writings held to be sacred. (John 39). The result of the labors in Berea as might be expected was highly encoun aging. Many believed—Jews and Greeks, honorable women—thus constituting a new church, the fourth established since Paul entered into Macedonia.

REFLECTIONS .- Note the different etween the Jews in the seaport town of Thessalonica and those of the secludes town of Berca. The former were big oted and cruel, seeking the life of Pau while among them and pursuing him afte his departure. (Verse 13). The latte ture, were seckers after the truth. The churches formed in these two cities re-flected the characteristics of the people. rest of Jason was ludicrous, and after a were in constant trouble on doctrinal mat-brief hearing and pecuniary security for ters, principally relating to the life to come They misunderstood the teachings missed. In 1876 an old triumphant arch at of Paul concerning the second advent of Thessalonica was destroyed, fragments of Christ (I Thess. iv. 16), ceased to labor, ties. To set them right he was obliged to address two letters to them. Those let nes of Sosipater, Gaius and Secundus, 22). Churches prosper according to the
