THE LEAD

From the Cleveland Plain-Dealer.

If my wife has a failure it is lack of reverence. She doesn't recognize those property rights which should inhere to the personal belongings of a husband. I got that expression at a meting of the Spartan Reform club, and it struck me as being good. If I remember right it was uttered by a fellow with a chronic distaste for work, whose wife supported him by dressmaking. I didn't tell Millie where I got the expression when quoted it to her, but she immediately said:

"That sounds like Jaff Sinks." Then she laughed. My wife has a ery musical laugh. I think that I was mildly reprimanding her at the time for mislaying the gimlet. I'm the most particular fellow you ever saw about keeping everything in its place. When I want a tool of any kind I want to know just where to lay my hands on it. It's a kind of religion with me, and it hurts me terribly to find things in confusion. That's where my wife's lack of reverence comes in. She has no respect for my eleventh commandment-order is heaven's first

It isn't alone gimlets, it is hammers and screw drivers and knives, and Lord knows what all. Why, she has even tampered with my razors!

I offered to buy her a razor of her own the last time she meddled with mine, but she said she guesses we didn't really need but one in the house. What can you do with such a woman?

Well, now that you understand my wife's failing-I'll admit it's her greatest one-I'll go on with the story with which it is connected.

One day last July, Jim Outhwick ame into the station just as I was losing up to go to supper. Jim is the paymaster at the Vulcan mills, and a right good fellow. "Hello, Joe," he says, "all alone?"

"Yes," I said; "what's up?" He flung a canvass grip on the table, ind said:

"I must go down the road tonight to Ashville. There's talk of a strike among the miners, and I've got to be on hand first thing in the morning. I'm to offer to pay off the disaffected ones and make a big show of my money. That's a bluff that generally goes. The boys'll make up their minds the company can't be scared and they-'Il get into line again. There's $26,000 in that bag, Joe."

I looked at the bag on the table and looked at Jim. "What do you bring it here for?" I

"That's easily explained," he answered, "I got word to start for Ashville just half an hour ago. The money was made up in a hurry and I didn't have time to go hone. I couldn't very well stay at the mill, and I wouldn't go to the tavern. So I just thought I'd come down here and get you to stay with me until the night freight comes along. She's due at 9.30 isn't "Nine thirty-five," I answered. But I'm just off for supper."

"Oh that's all right," he said, "I feel safe enough here. I'm armed to the teeth, you know, and there wouldn't be any danger until after dark. But you'll come back and keep me company, won't you?" "I will if Minnie lets me off," I said.

"I'm booked for cribbage with her "You tell Minnie I'll bring her the if she'll lend you for a couple of ours," laughed Jim. There was a stout old safe in the over of the office that had nothing in that blank waybills and reports. I un!ocked it and tossed the canvas bag inside.

"There," I said, as I thrust my bunch of keys in my sack coat pocket, "that makes it a little safer." I thought Jim looked a bit dubious over this precaution, but he laughed "All right, my boy. I'll make myself comfortable until you come back." Minnie didn't want me to go out one bit, but I told her Jim counted on me. I didn't say a word about the money, this town. Professor William Prince however. I knew it would worry her, and, to tell the truth, it worried me a little. I was sorry Jim brought it Park, were the guests of relatives in there, and I didn't like his talk about precautions.

Well, after supper I went out to see if the dog was all right-I've got the finest mastiff in the state-and when I came back Minnie called to me from the sitting room.

"Just a minute, Joe; I'm writing a ote for Hattie."

Hattie is the wife of the telegraph perator, and I knew that Minnie wantd me to leave it at the station, where he could get it in the morning.' It was quite a number of minutes, however, efore she came out with the note and my vest and coat. It was so warm I had left them off before supper. "Hadn't you better let the dog go with you, Joe?" she asked, as she helped ne with my coat. "No, no," I said, laughing, "he'll stay ome and take care of you. I'll put the lamp in the window, though, so you'll know I'm all right." That was a great joke of ours, but Minnie didn't laugh as she usually did.

"Mind," she said, "I'll watch for it, and if it isn't there, I'll come down after you."

I'm station master at Y. Our road is what's called the old line, and travel on it is light, mostly freight. At night the station is descried, there being no business for either telegraph operator or ticket agent. This leaves the station practically deserted after sundown. It is only a few rods from our home, however, and I feel that it's under my eye all the time. I thought of George Johns, James Hughes, David this as I walked back to the station and I didn't half like the idea of all that money being about.

I found Jim with his heels on the desk puffing away at a good cigar. "Not an alarm," he said, in his joking way. ""Not even a mouse,"

We chatted away for an hour or more, when Jim suddenly put down his feet and yawned heavily. "Joe," he said, "if you don't mind,

I'll go out and take a little stroll." "Go ahead," I said, "but mind you're not gone long. After he had stepped out I was sorry

I let him go. The thought of being alone with all that money was disquiet-I followed him to the door and ing. looked out. It was a bright night, and saw Jim slip around the corner. I knew he was after a drink. That was Jim's failing. That and gambling.

I went back and sat down. The more thought about that money the more didn't like the idea. What business had Jim to go away and leave all the responsibility with me? Of course, he didn't leave it all to me, but he left altogether too big a share. As I sat ther grumbling a low tap on the window overlooking the platform attracted my attention. I looked up. That Dealer.

side of the building was in shadow, but I could see a man's face against the

"Joe," said somebody outside, I supposed it might be one of the section hands and stepped across the room. "Open the window, Joe," said the olee. I pushed it up a little way.
"Is that you, Jerry?" I called.

There was no response. I put my head through the opening and looked up and down the line. Nobody was in sight. Just then I heard a slight noise behind me. I drew in my head. Something seemed to crash into my brain. A flash of blazing light blinded me. Then all was dark. When I came to I was tied in my chair, my head was sore and wet, and two men with strips of black cloth across their faces were looking down

"He's all right," said the shorter one. The tall man nodded. "Get the keys," he said, in a queer, noarse voice. The shorter man felt in my pockets "Not here!" he cried,

"They must be," said the tall man, in his hoarse voice.

"I tell you they are not. Bring the The tall man took the lamp from the window ledge and came closer to me. But their search was in vain. The tall man placed the lamp on the table, my ear. "Come!" he said, "where are those keys?"

My head was beginning to clear a little. I saw it all. My wife had taken the keys from my pockets because It was her way, and because she thought I had no further use for them until morning.

"He must have left the keys at ome," said the tall man, hurriedly. "Here, give him a sheet of paper and let him write a note to his wife, asking for them."

The short man looked up sharply. "I'll get them," said the tall man. They pulled the table up to me and spread out a scrap of paper. The short man loosed the rope and let my right hand free. I reached to my vest pocket half blindly and drew out my pencil, still in a daze. I tried to put my wife's name on the sheet. The pencil refused to make a mark. I looked at it. It was dull and horribly haggled about the point. I prided myself on the fine point put to my pencils. Again I comprehended that my wife had borrowed that very pencil to write the note to the operator's wife. I tried to scribble with the blunted thing.

"Curse you, hurry!" growled the short ruffian.

I showed the pencil point. With an exclamation of anger the short man drew out a heavy-handled knife and swiftly sharpened the pencil. As he passed it back my wandering vision was caught by the lamp on the table Heavens! It was no longer in the window! As this thought struck me, I looked toward the ledge and saw there white, scared face pressed against the pane. It was my wife. Write!" growled the short rufflan. My only thought was to gain time, knew my wife was there. I knew she would bring help.

I took the pencil in my nerveless fingers. As I did so a low growl caught my ear. It caught the ears of the villains, too. The short man dropped his knife on the table and turned toward the door with his revolver extended. The tall man drew himself up against the wall.

"It's the dog!" he hoarsely whispered. "Shoot to kill, Jack!" I saw the door tremble a little; I saw the short villain's arm raise, and my fingers close on the handle of the knife he had just dropped. Then, as the door slowly opened, I drew back my prettiest cribbage board in Ashville arm and thrust wildly at the man in front of me. Something yellow flew through the doorway, there was a wild scream, a heavy fall, and I lapsed into unconsciousness again. When I came around I was in bed at home, with Minnie bending over me. "It's all right, Joe," she murmured, "they've got them both locked up safe and sound and the money is all right, and the mill directors have given you

$1 000 of it " "And Jim?" I asked. "Jim?" she cried. "Why, Jim was the tall man. It was all his plot to steal the money and throw the blame on you. And if I hadn't taken your keys -don't scold-they'd have had the money, and if it hadn't been for the lead pencil I dulled-the man you stabbed told the whole story-I wouldn't have got there in time with Hector. The dog almost killed Jim before I could call him away, but I ain't sorry because the little man says they would have killed you if you had by any chance suspected Jim's identity.' I reached out and took Minnle's hand.

"That thousand dollars belongs to you, dear," I said brokenly. "Well," she answered, "if you take it, Jim, you may rest assured I'll borrow it sooner or later."

Then she put her cheek against my hand and laughed.
