The Orioles may be inflated by success, etc., but nevertheless they accord pleasant Orioles may be inflated by success, etc., but nevertheless they accept pleasant predictions about themselves with much eagerness. Ewing said: "I believe the Baltimores have the best chance. At least they played better ball here than the Bostons. Had we played the ball against Selec's team that we did against Hanlon's we would have made the same kind of a clean sweep. It strikes me that Boston is weak in the pitching department. If they don't get another pitcher to help out Nichols they will have their troubles. There are some great players on bles. There are some great players on the Boston team, but they must have pitchers to win." Pop Hanlon read the Ewing interview a couple of times.
