Conways and Corcorans Get Mixed in a Law Case.

The Conways and Corcorans have been neighbors for twenty-four years, more or less, down in Bellevue, but of late they have had trouble. Last Saturday they engaged in a tongue-lashing down on Broadway, and Michael Corcoran felt the sting of insult which John Conway and his wife Kate gave him, and in consequence he had a warrant sworn out before Alderman Kel-low, of the Fourteenth ward. At the hearing several witnesses testified that the Corcorans were troublesome neighbors, and that they made insulting remarks about the Conways. The alderman believed the evidence was sufficient to hold Michael under ball, but discharged his wife, as there was not sufficient evidence upon which to hold her, John Niland qualified as his bondsman.

Bargain-Day Price Asked of a Man with a Sand Bag.

At 2 o'clock yesterday morning George Carroll and a companion entered a lunch wagon on Lackawanna avenue and after conversing with the walter, Carroll suddenly struck the waiter on the head with a sandbag, it is supposed.

The waiter yelled for help and Patrolman Haggerty responded just as the two men ran out of the wagon. They had twenty yards start, but Haggerty wasn't phased. He folowed them down Lackawanna avenue, along the Delaware and Hudson tracks at the "Y;" up Center street to Franklin ave-bridge, where Haggerty caught one of the men as he was crawling under some empty railroad cars. The fellow was taken to the police station, where he spent the night. His companion escaped. Their intent was to all appearances robbery. The waiter stated that before Carroll struck him his companion offered him a drink from a bottle. The waiter refused. Then it was that Carroll suddenly drew something from behind him and delivered the blow. What the instrument was is not known. Carroll probably dropped it in his flight. At the hearing yesterday morning

Mayor Balley fined Carroll $5. He had only $3, so he paid this and was discharged.

Was Shot and Mortally Wounded in Wisconsin Last Night.

A burglar, who gave his name as James Crone," of Scranton, was shot at Durand, Wis., last night, according to information received by the Tribune. He was mortally wounded. "Crone" is believed to be the James McCrone who left the North End sev eral months ago and, it was supposed left for the west. He had frequently ran counter to the police, but never for offenses more serious than brawls, bar-room fighting and petty crime. Two years ago his father, William McCrone, a huckster, of 212 Charles street, was stabbed, but not fatally. The police had to fight their way into the house, because the son denied them admission. He was for some time thought to have been guilty of the stabbing, but later the crime was fixed upon another, who, however, eluded ar rest.

rom the Oil City Blizzard. About half a mile above Franklin, up the Erie railroad track, is to be seen WARREN & KNAPP, ATTORNEYS and Counsellora-at-law, Republican building, Washington avenue, Scranton, Pa. one of the most curious sights in this country and one which the reporter would not believe existed until yesterday, when he went there with a friend. Approaching a small sluggish stream, we were surprised to see rising from the surface of the water a number o bubbles, which glistened in the sun like glass. It was a beautiful sight. The iridescent spheres revolving swiftly, after the manner of soap bubbles, floated rapidly upward, some breaking at a height of ten or twenty feet, others soaring away above the tree tops and out of sight, resembling more than anything else, gorgeous toy balloons. These bubbles were all sizes, from an inch in diameter to more than a foot. They were apparently much stronger and a great deal more brilliant than ordinary soap bubbles. A gas line and an oil line had passed under the run at this point, within a few inches of each other, and in each pipe was a small leak. The digging nue, to Spruce, to the Linden street and refilling of the trenches had made a dam which held a few barrels of stagnant water. There was some alkall in the muddy bottom, which, in combination with the oil, formed saponule, a kind of soap. This, while not being a perfect soap, was sufficiently saponacecus and cohesive to make beautiful bubbles when churned by the escaping gas. The fact that the bub-bles were full of gas caused them to ascend more swiftly, and the presence of the oil made them more brilliant, many colored and unusually beautiful

The bubbles are rising constantly and can be seen by any one who desires to take a walk out to where they are. The strength of these bubbles may be magined from the fact that small twigs, leaves, etc., had been floating on the surface of the water and were carried up in the large bubbles.
