THEY CALLED HIS BLUFF.

The Conceited New York Drummer Taken Down a Peg or Two. From the Home Magazine. A half-dozen traveling men entered the lobby of a western hotel together, but the man with the silk and patent leathers and his way right up to the desk, registered as H. J. Powell Smith, New York, and loudly remarked to the clerk:

"I want the best bedroom in the house; first floor, southern exposure." "Yes, sir," replied the clerk, and he assigned him a room before any of the other arrivals had yet registered.

At dinner the New Yorker had his bottle of wine, and when through he stalked into the office with a gold toiletpick in his mouth, lit a Havana and then directed the waiter to the comfortable rocking chairs.

"Who is this fellow?" asked a grocery salesman. "A drummer from Greater New York," was the clerk's answer. "Why, I thought he was a big Easterner."

"Well, anyone would think as you do. They don't grow any bigger in this country." "Only a common, every-day drummer, like myself," said the grocery man. "Well, I must find out what firm he represents." And he did so during the evening.

That night after supper the New Yorker again resumed his accustomed rattle in the lobby, snapped his finger for a bell boy, handed him a $5 bill, asked him to step over to the cigar stand and get three for a dollar.

Just then by previous arrangement between the groceryman and a messenger boy, the latter entered with a telegram and handed it to the owner of the establishment. "Rosenstein & Isaacs gone under for $250,000."

"That was the firm the fellow traveled for. He read the wire once more and his face grew ghastly pale. "What's the matter?" he asked the grocery man; "any bad news?"

He turned with a sickly smile; handing over the message to his interlocutor, he said, in a shocked voice: "I read that; I'm ruined; I haven't money enough to get back, and this is my first trip out before."

The boys who by this time caught on to the play, tried to soothe him as best they could, but it was no use, for he seemed to be utterly crushed. At last the joke had been carried far enough, and the grocery man called him to one side and told him it was all a hoax. The fresh young man begged to have them all swear not to say any more about it. They all agreed if he would set 'em up to the crowd, it was all right, and he assented. It might be stated that during the balance of his sojourn the New Yorker kept mighty quiet.

THE NEW COACHMAN.

How He Will Be Interrogated in the Days to Come. From the Toledo Blade. This is the sort of an interview which may be expected when motor carriages come into use: "You advertised for a coachman, sir?" said the applicant. "I did," replied the merchant. "Do you want the place?"

"Yes, sir." "Have you had any experience?" "I have been in the business all my life." "You are used to handling gasoline, then?" "Yes, sir." "And you are well up in electricity?" "Thoroughly."

"Good! Of course, you are a machinist, also?" "Certainly." "Then I presume you have an engineer's certificate?" "Of course."

"Very well, you may go around to the out-house and get the motorcycle ready. My wife tells me she wishes to do a little shopping."
