A WASTED SCOOP.

His Story Would Have Been a Hummer But for Influential Reasons.

From the Detroit Free Press. "Hardest piece of reporting I ever did," sighed the old newspaper man, "never got into print. It doesn't require much to put a keen reporter on the scent. A careless remark made in my hearing suggested that a wealthy corporation had suffered heavily through embezzlement. I went to the president of the institution with the protense of a good deal more informa-tion than I possessed. He not only denied everything but made the too common mistake of abusing reporters in general and me in particular. Such treatment tends to produce pernicious activity on the part of the abused. 'A little later I overheard a rapid friend of the president's son expressing surprise that he abould have left the city so suddenly and in such a hurry. It was the opinion of the rakish friend that there must be a big lark on hand. This put a conviction into my head, and these intuitive convictions often lead up to great news. "That evening, through a gracious request of the city editor, I was driven to the paintial residence of the presi-There was an evening party on and when a spirit like unto that of the immortal six hundred had carried me past the imposing individual at the door, I gazed upon a vision of fair wo-men who were only fashionably chary of their fairness, and men more or less brave. The handsome old president, a born bluffer, blustered into the hall and was rapidly arranging for my exit | motto, 'Masters are not always stupidupon the boot toe of a plebian function-ary, when I began in a loud voice to tell what I didn't know about the son. He fairly dragged me up stairs and there finished the whole disgraceful story with a well-backed request that I suppress it. I referred him to the city edi-tor and hurried to the office where I wrote a 'beat' that was a hummer. "I heard coupe after coupe drive to the front of the office. In the wee hours stockholders appeared on the

THE QUEER WILLS OF QUEER PEOPLE

A Man Who Wanted the Irish to Drink Themselves to Death.

A CLERGYMAN'S STRANGE BEQUEST

How an Old German Left His Fortune to a Relative Whom He Disliked -- A Valet Who Expected Legacy and What He Got--Wills That Were Set to Rhyme.

There is probably no subject of more general interest than wills; everyone who desires to dispose of his property and to control the earnings of his life after death must make one. No subject furnishes so much material for the modern novelist, and many and weird are the fictitious documents created by our authors. Lawyers frequently say that some wills of fiction are utterly inconceivable as actual facts. Nevertheless, says the Philadelphia Times, legal records show more eccentric, more ambiguous, more astounding wills than all novels of the world combined. Every will, unless drawn by the fam-PENNSYLVANIA ily lawyer, in the most formal manner, reflects something of the character of the testator, and necessarily reflects his opinion on one subject or another. Thus it is quite evident that the man who began his will by saying, "This is my will, and the Court of Chancery need not make another for me," evidently had a small opinion of chancery, which was perhaps justified, as chancery did not fail to make his will over for him. A down-easter made a will in which every bequest showed his true Yankee wit: "To my wife one shilling per week, wherewith to buy hazlenuts, as she has always preferred cracking them to darning my stockings. To my oldest sister my five-acre field, to console her for being married to a man whom she is obliged to henpeck. To my sister Ellen the family Bible, recommending her to learn as much of its spirit as she already knows of its leter, that she may become a better Christian. To my sister Lydia my silver drinking cup, for reason known to herself. To my brother John my books, that he may learn to read with them. To my brother-in-law Christopher my best pipe, out of gratitude that he married my sister Lydia, whom to man of sense would have taken,"

AN ENGLISHMAN'S WILL.

An Englishman who lived in Ireland and who entertained a violent dislike for the Hibernians, made one of the most novel wills ever recorded. One of the provisions was as follows:

"I give and bequeath the annual sum of ten pounds, to be paid in perpetually out of my estate, to the following purpose: It is my will and purpose that this sum shall be spent in the purchase of a certain quantity of the liquor vulgariy called whisky, and it shall be publicly given out that a certain number of persons, Irish only, not to exceed twenty, who may choose to isser le in the cemetery in which I shall be interred, on the anniversary of my death, shall have the same distributed to them."

"Further, it is my desire that each shall receive it half a pint at a time till the cars "bogie clerestoried corridor the whole is consumed; each likewise coaches," bogie being a term applied eing provided with a stout oaken stick that with these materials given, they will not fail to destroy each other, and when in the course of time the results of the course of time the results of the course of time the results of the results when, in the course of time, the race comes to be exterminated, this neighporhood, at least, may be colonized by civilized and respectable Englishmen.' A vindictive old German, who violenty disliked his only relative, left him his large fortune, provided he should always reside in the state of Michigan and always wear white linen clothes, the track as the train speeds along at and should not supplement these by extra garments in winter. A dissenting clergyman of Yorkshire made the following remarkable bequests: "To my daughter Mary 100 ounds, provided she dress with greater cording to his custom he will give it all to the poor. To the vestry of the established church of this village five crowns, to provide six Bibles every year, for which six men and six women shall throw dice on Whit Tuesday after service, at which time the clergyman shall kneel at the south end of the communion table and pray God to direct the luck to his glory." KNEW HUMAN NATURE. Possibly no will ever showed a more who made the following bequest to his valet: "As for you, my good and ad-mirable valet, who have so long taken me for your dupe you will now learn it is you who have been mine. When, at the conclusion of my dinner, you thought I was aplauding your economy and zeal, in carefully putting together the remains of bottles of wine and keeping them for the next meal, it never occurred to you that I knew you took for your own use whole bottles. When you came to me with tearful eyes and coaxing voice to wait on me the moment I was suffering from any trifling indisposition, presenting to me your service and sympathy, you little thought how my instinct followed you into the servants' hal, guessed the language in which you expressed yourself there, "The fellow can't last much longer; then I shall get my hard-earned legacy.' Well, my dear fellow, you made a mistake. I bequeath you the er than their servants." Some of the most remarkable will have been made by monarchs and other distinguished persons.

Henry VII. desired in his will that "our executors and supervisors of our testament have a special respect in our funeral to the laud and praising of God. the health of our soul, and somewhat to our dignity royal, but avoiding pomp and outrageous superfluities. Rabelals, the great satirist, made the scene. The child of my enterprise and genius was strangled. Perhaps it was best."

following will: "I have no available property. I owe a great deal; the rest I give to the poor." The shortest will on record contains only five words

"My wife to have all." WILLS IN RHYME. Many wills in rhyme have been re orded and the provisions duly carried out, some of them very elaborate and others consisting of a single couplet. In 1803 a will was contested and confirmed which read:

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

Royal makes the food pure.

I give and bequeath, When I'm laid underneath, To my two loving sisters most dear. The whole of my store, Were it twice as much more Which God's goodness has given me here

And that none may prevent This my will and intent, Or occasion the least of law racket, With a solemn appeal I confirm, sign and seal

This the true act and deed of Will Hack-Another which was produced by a Philadelphia attorney of no mean reputation ran thus:

As to all my worldly goods now, or to be in store, give to my beloved wife and her forevermore. I give all freely, I no limit fix This is my will and she's executrix.

LONGEST RAILROAD RUN.

The Cornwall Express from London to Exeter Goes 194 Miles Without Stop. The longest regular daily run made without a stop by any railway train in the world has just been placed on the schedule of the Great Western Railway, of England.

It is made between Paddington Station, in London, and Exeter, a distance of 194 miles, in three hours and thirty-six minutes, by what is known as the Cornwall express. It is remarkable not so much owing to the time as for the fact that not a stop is made from one end of the run to the other. There have been longer runs made without a stop, but they have been made by special and not regular trains. The average speed attained by the Cornwall express when making this run is 53.8 miles an hour, although, owing to a peculiar construction of the road at Bristol, 118 miles from London, the train is obliged to slow down to a speed of ten miles an hour.

The express train is composed of six long coaches, a tender and engine. An American would call it a vestibule train, but the English prefer to call to the trucks. They are fully as heavy and a knife, and they shall drink it all as an ordinary drawing room car, each on the pot. Knowing what I know of one weighing about forty-seven thouthe Irish character, my conviction is sand pounds, while the train without gine and tender is eighty-one tons, making the total weight of the train as it rushes along on its long run two hundred and twenty-one tons.

During the run it is necessary to take water for the engine twice. This, however, does not necessitate any stop, as it is taken up from a trench beside nearly a mile a minute.

The engine which draws this essentially "through train" is a curious looking, ponderous affair quite unlike any locomotive seen on American roads. It has on either side a single decency than heretofore. To John huge driving wheel seven feet eight Edmunds nothing, knowing that acby comparison be termed the small wheels of the engine, six in number, known as trailers, are four feet six inches in diameter.

The water tank of the engine holds thirteen thousand gallons, and when running at full speed there is a steam pressure of 100 pounds to the square nch, while there is a heating surface of 1,561 square feet.

Each day the run is made, the train leaving Paddington Station at 10.25 o'clock in the morning, and it never thorough understanding of human na-ture than that of the Marquis of A-. Exeter, exactly on time. The time allowed by the schedule on this run makes no allowance for delays of any nd. Even the time lost in going over the loop around Bristol and the necessary slowing down when going through Bath is not allowed for.

New York, Aug. 18.—High water mark for the season was reached in the wheat market today, not only on values but as to the volume of transactions as well. Prices advanced 4½ to 5 cents for the day and sales reached the big lot of 16,315,000 bushels. Excitement prevailed in the mar-ket from start to finish, but particularly in the last hour when the advances became so rapid that frequently the fluc-tuations were marked by 14 cent fractions instead of the 14 and 1-15 changes that instead of the ¼ and 1-1s changes that are ordinarily seen. The total range on September was 91¼ to 94% cents against $9% cents, the lowest price of yesterday. The greater part of today's proceedings on the floor of the Stock exchange consisted of a kind of fencing for position or to develop the position of opposing elements. The bulls were not in an aggressive mood and there was not at any time during the day an active buying demand. luring the day an active buying demand,
