Today's Games. Cleveland at Baltimore, Pittsburg at Boston, St. Louis at Brooklyn Cincinnati at Philadelphia, Chicago at Washington.

A Game of Kicking. Philadelphia, Aug. 20.—After dropping twelve straight games the Phillies broke their losing streak by winning the first contest from Cincinnati this afternoon. The game was marked by constant wrangling during which several of the visitors were fined and Ehret, who suc-ceeded Dwjet in the second inning, was retired to the bench. The Phillies won principally through the battery errors of the Cincinnatis. Breitenstein had the locals guessing in the second game until the eighth inning, when they bunched four hits. Fifield was very effective except in the innings in which the Reis made therr runs. Attendance, 4,263. Scores: First game-

SOME FACTS ABOUT

Many Predict a Radical Change from the Wheel of Today.

PERFECTION HAS NOT BEEN REACHED

Present Style of Frame to Stand the Test of Several Years but There Will Be Constant Change in the Line of Detail--Mechanics Studying How to Do Away with the Troublesome Chain.

By many it is predicted that the bicyele of the future will be a radical departure from the wheel of today. As near perfect as the wheel of today may e, it is not so perfect that improvements cannot be made in it. This has been the invariable rule of mechanics, and the bicycle can hardly prove an exception. Stimulated by the demand of the public for something better, the n-anufacturers will endeavor to put an to gratify the whims of this class.

The diamond frame has been recognized as the strongest combination that could be made for bicycle construction. It has stood the test well, but now the demand is for something different. Accordingly the triangle or pyramid frame wheel has made its appearance. It may be several years ahead of its day, as popular fancy has not taken to that style of construction as yet. This is only one of the most prominent departures from the present style of bicycle frames. There are innumerable designs on the market, but they are either lacking in some qualities, or else do not equal the present style in weight, and are therefore objectionable to riders. No cyclist is going back to a thirty-pound wheel after having pushed a twenty-pound or twenty-two pound wheel for several years. It would be a foolish move, indeed.

RECENT CHANGES.

Within the past three or four years there have been no improvements in the Throop Stars for a game on the the general design of the bloycle. The improvements that have been made are mostly in the line of detail, though manager. in this direction some wonderful strides have been made. The number of changes in this direction are too many to mention here. The weight of the wheel has been reduced to a point undreamed of four or five years ago, until today the factor of safety is the smallest known in mechanical construction. The tires have been wonderfully improved upon, and the matter of repair brought into the hands of all riders.

The tread has been brought down to scientific basis. The bearings have been made as near perfect as is possi-ble, though it is admitted by all bicycle experts there is plenty of room for unprovement yet. The bearings have also been made as near dust proof as possible, while arrangements for the chain adjustment have been patented by a number of people. The cranks and sprockets have been brought down to a scientific basis also, and innumerable other smaller details have been looked Providence Journal. the improvements on it we would have a model bicycle, but as it is the improvements are scattered over a number of different makes and as a result no particular wheel is perfect.

The latest trend for improvement is in the matter of the chain. The idea in view is to abolish the chain. Two years or perhaps three years ago a chainless wheel made its appearance on the market, but it did not meet with popular approval. The chainless consisted of two cog wheels, connected by a rod, which took the place of the chain. It remained one season, but did not give perfectly satisfactory results, and as a result has not been seen in this country for some time.

CHAINLESS BICYCLE. The movement for a chainless bicyele is now stronger than ever, and many predict that the chainless wheel will be the bicycle of the future. This may be true. It is understood that one of the largest bicycle manufacturing concerns on the market is making arrangements to turn out a chainless wheel for next season. If such a wheel does make its appearance the chances are that the price of bicycles will revert to nearly their original price, and the general public pay for the novelty in construction. The first year or so of the chainless bicycle, if it does appear, will be more in the nature of an experiment than anything else, and the purchaser is the one to furnish the experience. Of the proposed new gears, one is propulsion by means of a cog arrangement, and the other by friction. The latter is the invention of a St. Louis bartender. It would seem in the friction chainless that the wear and tear on the tire would be great, and that the pushing of the bicycle would be much harder than with the chain though it is claimed that the revolutions of the rear wheel are increased with less pedaling. The cog chainless would require a guard on the real wheel, something on the order of a ladies' wheel, to prevent the clothes of the rider from being caught and tor by the large wheel when revolving.
