TORMENTOR DID IT.

Drove Aged David R. Williams Out of His Mind and Attempted Suicide ls a Result.

David R. Williams, of South myde Park avenue, an old soldier and wellknown resident of the West Side, attempted suicide by slashing his throat with a bread knife yesterday morning. He made an ugly gash but no vital point was reached, and at the West Side hospital, where he was taken for treatment, it was said last night that would likely recover.

The deed was the result of insanity. During the war, while stationed in a derangement of his weak mind. barracks in Philadelphia, Williams was knocked over a gallery railing by two men engaged in a friendly wrestling match, which he was watching, and in his fall landed on a stack of bayoneted guns. One bayonet entered just below his right eye and pierced his head, it is supposed to the skull. The other entered beneath the chin and took an upward course as far as the roof of the mouth. He was given up for dead but managed to pull through. When he came out of the hospital, however, one side was partially paralyzed and his mind was not as strong as it had been, although he to Schuylkill county where his father | dered by the company's quartette. was a boss and became a special officer. During the Molly Maguire troubles his father was shot while washing in the house after coming home line the companies marched to ple, rushed out into the darkness and. killed one of them and wounded the of the Hallstead Herald, on behalf of other. He served with the coal and the Hallstead Hose company. iron police for a number of years, and finally became engineer at the Hamp-

He worked there until a few weeks ngo, when his actions indicated that his and he was placed under a doctor's care. He grew worse and worse, until finally during the last five or six days he had to be constantly watched.

On Wednesday night, his watchers say, he paced the hallway during the greater part of the night. In the morning he seemed to be quite calm and read the morning papers with evident interest. All of a sudden he jumped up and pointing to a photograph about a woman who had committed suicide, said: "That's one way of ending trouble." After breakfast he said he wanted to go for a walk and as this was a usual thing for him to do everey day, nothing was thought of it. One of the men followed him at a respectable distance, but either became negligent or mementarily lost sight of him. At all events, Williams some time later was found in Morse Bro,'s barn with his throat gashed and a cut in his right Driver Andrew Coyne, who found him groaning in one of the ctalis, gave an alarm and secured assistance in removing him across the road to the West Side hospital. Doctors Carroll and Williams examined him and found that neither the jugular vein wind pipe had been severed, and that the wound was not necessarily and in a good way to recover.

Williams complained a great deal of late of a man who worked with him at the Hampton mine, and who continually tormented him about his pension, saying that his wound was a self-inflicted one and that he was cheating the government. He had the man arrested three weeks ago and arraigned before Alderman Howe. The case was settled on the tormentor agreeing to refrain further from his mean remarks. These insinuations despite his advanced age 62 years, he preyed on Williams' mind, and he often spoke of them. It is thought that this as much as anything else caused the

It was probably the finest parade Hallstead has ever witnessed mind was commencing to grow weak and the Franklins received ovation after ovation all along the gaily decorated route. The parade was reviewed and disbanded at the Mitchell House, after a fitting speech made by William Pike, private secretary of Galusha A. Grow, behalf of the citizens of Hallstead. The remainder of the afternoon and the evening was then spent in the usual jollification. A big dance platform had been erected and dance music furnished. In the evening the Franklins were entertained at Mr. Compton's Speeches, good cheer and music filled in the time. The "boys" thoroughly did the town and are one and all enthusiastic in their appreciation of the welcome and entertainment afforded them by the Hallstaed people.

The return trip was made in good ime, the train leaving Hallstead at
