THE JERSEY PEACH CROP.

Bigger Than Ever; Fruit Small and Present Prices Very Low.

Trenton, N. J., Aug. 30,-The height of the peach season will be reached in New Jersey during this week. Last week many thousands of baskets were shipped to New York, Boston, Philadelphia and other places, but the bulk of the crop is yet to be marketed. The crop this season will exceed that of any previous year. Conservative estimates make the aggregate over three and a half million baskets. The late frosts did no damage. The immature peaches are mainly in the orchards of those growers who refused to thin out their overloaded trees early in the summer, and the damage by hall storms was confined to a small part of Hunterdon county. The Hunterdon county peach growers have organized a peach exchange, which enables them to realize fair prices and ship the fruit to markets that are not over-stocked.

Trenton is the chief market for many of the smaller growers in Hunterdon, Mercer, Monmouth and Burlington counties, and during the past week peaches could be bought for as low as 10 and 15 cents a basket, while large, fine fruit was in abundance at 40 to 60 cents. In ordinary years it would have brought three times as much. The quality of the fruit this year is inferior, but the grow-ers who thinned out the fruit on the trees in June are marketing good peaches now. There are trees in some orchards near Trenton that are so loaded that they remind one of an apple tree in full bloom. The peaches are no larger than almonds, and are made up of pits, skin and fuzz. Ira Burlis, a Hightstown farmer, was ira Burtis, a Hightstown farmer, was asked, yesterday if he had any peaches. "No." he replied. "At least I don't call them peaches. The trees are full of something, but I don't know what, and I will not find out. Whatever they are, they are too small to pick, and I won't have any peaches this year. Many of my neighbors are in the same boat."

The late fruit is said to be superior to that now ripening. that now ripening.

Decalcomania Views Can Be Burned in by a New Process. A new process of applying decalcomania pictures upon porcelain or glass was recently patented by W. Wachter, of Ilmenau, Germany. He places a mixture of 40 parts of a 5 per cent. solution of carbolic acid with on part of oil of cloves upon the back of the decalcomania picture. Previous to laying the picture upon the glass or porcelain its surface is covered with a thin layer of sticky lacquer, which after burning leaves no ashes. When the decalcomania is applied to this surface the lacquer prevents the picture from slipping, while the back of the decalcomania is rubbed with the solution of carbolic acid and oil of cloves. As soon as the paper is taken off the article is placed into the kiln, where the picture is burned into the surface to be ornamented. The lacquer disappears absolutely, being burn ed away in the oven
