pect the lost time to be paid for at the same rate as if it had been used in service, but other people have to smile and look pleased when their patron forgets to appear. The only person in business who really gets even in this matter is the dressmaker, and she, as a rule, amply avenges all the short-comings of womankind in general in the lack of punctuality or total forgetfulness of engagements.

It often makes a great deal of difference whether or not a woman makes a practice of keeping her appointments, and yet what a terrible bore the "awfully" prompt woman is, and how murderous she causes other less correct sisters to feel.

Men will always tell a lie when we are late (unless the men are our husbands, fathers or brothers) and say "It really doesn't matter," and we

that somebody doesn't build a set of know all the time it does matter a lot, pleasant apartment houses in this but how could we help it? Didn't the gown we wanted to wear have to be altered at the last minute, or didn't we have to pause a second or two and gaze at a lovely new hat in the shop window? But the punctual woman, who, when we straggle in a few minpearance in this city, three or four above a first floor devoted to store utes behind time, looks at her watch and frowns while an expression of better-than-those-ness comes over her countenance-wouldn't we like to see the wheel roll off her carriage, or hear the back breadths rip from her carefully hung gown, as she inadvertently steps on its hem, or have almost any mild catastrophe happen that could make her late just once, so that we could look at our watches and frown? But nothing ever does happen to her. She is never late, never flurried, never discomposed, never anything but correct and good form and she will carry, out the programme to the end of the chapter; probably even being prepared to chide death at the last for being delayed beyond his scheduled time because such excellent order prevails in the house that he believes no one to be at home.

Colonel J. H. Mapleson has secured the Olympic theater, London, and will produce grand and comic opera. The Duke of Marlborough is said to be among his financial backers. Colonel Mapleson last visited Scranton about five years ago, at the nead of a comiopera company, in which his wife, the lamented Laura Schrimer, placed the leading role. "Fadette," the opera produced, was a dreary composition of no merit whatever, and the talented company engaged by the colonel were unable to make anything out of it "Fadette" received a merited "frost" and the Mapleson Opera company wen to pieces in a Southern town, The members of the company walked back to New York, and Mrs. Mapleson se cured an engagement in that city, where she sang until the time of her death.

John H. Blackwood, formerly editor of the Scranton Sunday World, will be treasurer of the Francis Wilson Opera company this season. Theatrical and operatic managers are realizing more fully each year the value of bright newspaper men in their business and a few seasons hence it is probable that there will be few members of the business end of theatrical enterprise who are not graduates from journalism. John Blackwood is one of the brightest of Scranton newspaper men and has had much experience in the theatrical line. There is no doubt that he will prove one of the most valuable members of Mr. Wilson's staff.

Perhaps the publication of the year which will most interest musicians is to be by Madame Marchesi-entitled "Marchesi and Music," a book of reminiscences, issued by Harper & Bochers.

Miss Edith Burrill, the famous so prano singer of Brooklyn, is visiting at the residence of H. C. Du Boies. She will sing tomorrow evening at the Calvary Reformed church, on Gibson street.

THE RAIN.

The earth is parched, and wearily droops The grass and waving grain; And Nature sighs "Neath glaring skies,

And wills 'neath the scarching pain of the bright, bright sun-And longs for the rain, the rain,

The wind blows fresh from the misty

A cloud veil flies Across the skies-Loud rattles the weather-vane-

And the parched earth laughs And quaffs and quaffs Her fill of the rain, the rain, rooms. Beautiful and convenient accommodation for stores appear at frequent intervals on our streets, but their vacancy is as depressing as a series of pedestrians each adorned with a black eye. It isn't an evidence of our vaunted prosperity and progress to see so many empty stores and offices. Of course the newer office buildings continue to be occupied. The tenants move out of the building erected last year to take the one just finished. It is like buying a '97 wheel. There isn't a toss up difference in real value between one made in December of last year, or one turned out January 1897, but the bicyclist feels that he has a reputation to sustain and he must have the up-to-date wheel. It is fashionable to move into the latest building with the crispest frills. Then it gives an excuse for a little advertising in the only way permissible to a professional man, so the lawyer,

What some energetic real estate man should do is to get up plans for sensible apartment houses in the proper location and his fortune is secured. There is a lovely plot of ground on Jefferson avenue at the corner of Mulberry street, adjoining the residence of the late George Throop. It isn't likely that the present owners want to sell, but that is an ideal location for an elegant and fashionable structure and with light on all sides, a large number of tenants could be accommodated. Some of the apartments should consist of five or six rooms to suit small families, who now find it difficult to rent a dwelling at all meeting the requirements. The rent could include elevator service and the care taker could arrange to furnish domestic assistance when needed, Such a building has been devised under the direction of a Chicago woman who is likely to make a fine income from its proceeds. The difficulty with most projectors of any such departure in this city, is that they have proposed selecting the wrong location. The sort of people who would make this investment desirable will not live on any or all streets that might be suggested. They prefer a neighborhood such as they have been familiar with previously, Such a spot as that already designated, or a lot which might be secured on Wyoming avenue in the four hundred block, or on Madison, Monroe or Quincy avenues, would certainly be profitable as a site for such a purpose.

"Dear me" said a fair young woman whose busines it is to make people look younger and feel better," every woman ought to be in business for a little time in order to see how important it is to keep her appointments. Of course it doesn't matter to the society woman or the girl of leisure, if she forgets that she made an engagement at 30 and goes off to play golf instead. There are other days and she can make a second appointment; but how about other persons whose time is absorbed and whose plans are disarranged by the failure?" Then she took car and went up on the Hill to fill an appointment with a patron who was probably down town. . . .

This has been said so often of women that it almost seems they have accepted it as a fact and act accordingly. It means wasted hours and lost dollars for the waiting one. There are a few dentists who hold their patients to their appointments and ex-

little woman who makes you younger. Why, she gives you face massage, of course; fixes up your hands until even if you paint china or have grubby fingers from much meddling with the ink bottle-(a thing women should never allow themselves to do)-they will look quite as if they belonged to a duchess. She pinches and pulls your checks with such deft touches, all with the softest possible fingers, that the blood tints the newly aroused skin and you feel like a happy school girl, She doesn't believe in steaming the visage: nobody does any more, who knows anything about treatment of the face, but she will really cause many wrinkles to disappear and will show how the tired muscles may be wonderfully rested-an art needed in this town, where much sunshine and bicycling produce queer puckered up faces on most women who ride, whether they
