KLONDIKE CRAZE OR RACE FOR RICHES

Was the Basis of a Sermon by Rev. Dr. James McLeod.

HELPLESSNESS OF GREAT RICHES. It Cannot Purchase the Comforts That Go with a Modest Life and Healthful, Noble Pursuits—Honor Awaits Those Who Get Money but Do Not Hide It Beneath a Hedge—Laborer's Walking Delegate Receives a Scolding.

"The Klondike Craze or the Race for Riches, in the Light of the Bible," was the topic of a discussion by Rev. Dr. James McLeod in the Presbyterian church last night. It was the first of a series of Sunday evening lectures and was heard by a large congregation.

Dr. McLeod's text was I Timothy, VI. 9, "For the love of money is the root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows." He introduced his lecture by his topical reference to the yellow metal and its philosophy and its uses and abuses. The present Klondike excitement served as a means to illustrate how men will undergo all manner of privations and hardships and death in a chase for gold, a chase so uncertain and unfruitful that but a few paltry dollars per capita will be realized by the greedy men who undertake to hunt the elusive stuff.

The helplessness of the rich and the utility of the gold and wealth, Dr. McLeod remarked, were constantly apparent. Riches could not purchase sleep, happiness or access to heaven. It was, in fact, easier for those in moderate circumstances to attain those goals, all other things being equal, as the less wealthier classes were not handicapped and overburdened with the trials and responsibilities which weighed upon the class of affluence. This comment was based upon the common verdict that the richer classes did not give of themselves in the same proportionate generosity and charity as did those in more moderate circumstances.

DESPERATE CHANCES. With all the uncertainty that sudden wealth brings, the uncertainty of getting it and the greater certainty of getting rid of it, scores of men were at that moment probably en route over the Chilkoot Pass. They were chasing the rigors of arctic winter, starvation, sickness and death in a struggle for gold, caring more for it than for home, for country, for self, for religion.

It was possible, Dr. McLeod said, for one to love money in one than in another. A man may love money as an end in itself, as a thing to be hoarded, or he may love it as a means to an end, as a thing to be used for the benefit of others. The latter is the man who works in order to earn an honest living and not to get money to hide in a hedge or to enjoy a dishonorable privilege.

The laboring man who sweats for his pittance was entitled to the consideration and good offices of all of God's people, but the walking delegate was another creature. The chief result of the walking delegate's earning capacity was to earn money and starve wives and children, to defile law and order, to commit murder. He would make beggars for a few dimes or drinks of beer; he wanted something for nothing; he was a despicable creature.

There were men whose want of money for the sake of money was a consuming passion. They would risk death, take desperate chances, be unscrupulous and encourage shattered mind and body to secure riches; there was nothing beyond it or before it; it was their chief and only aim.

MONEY FOR GOD. A man who wants money for the good he can do with it is an immortal and worthy of his maker. Some of the world's greatest benefactors and reformers received but scant wages from a world they served so well, but the memory of their good works would always be kept green.

For the benefit of young men, Dr. McLeod observed, that though man's nature was the goal desired in some quarters, the young would have the testimony of a good conscience to sooth their dying hours if they lived honest, simple and noble lives, devoting their talents to good works rather than a hunt for riches. Wealth could not save a dying man's soul nor his body, but a good, honest life could accomplish both and would bring the favored individual to a final welcome and approbation from his maker.

THE ASSAULT OF NOVACK IS IN JAIL

Mike Keket Threw the Stone Which Caused the Injury.

BETRAYED BY HIS COMPANIONS. Three of the Attackers, When Arrested, Fearing They Would Be Called to Answer for the Consequences of the Cowardly Assault, Make a Clean Breast of the Affair to County Detective Leyshon—Keket Admits His Guilt.

The assailants of Andrew Novack have been rounded up by County Detective Leyshon and the man who threw the stone which caused the probably fatal wound is now in the county jail. His name is Michael Keket and he was taken into custody yesterday morning by Constable Richard Barron, of Dickson City.

Saturday night County Detective Leyshon, Constable Barron and Special Officer Morris, of Olyphant, arrested three of the crowd which participated in the assault. They are Stanley and Andrew Grutkoski, of Priceburg, and Joe Colbish, of Olyphant. They were given a hearing before Squire Logan, of Dickson City, and held under $500 bail to answer at court. Their friends who came around to get their security advised the prisoners to tell who the stone-throwers were in order that they themselves might not be held for the crime, and after a time they thought they did not know whether or not any of the stones thrown by the latter caused damage. Keket was found by Constable Barron and Zolochinski was carried by County Detective Leyshon. The former could not furnish $1,000 bail and was committed by Squire Logan to the county jail. John Maycock became Zolochinski's bondsman in the sum of $500 and he was released. Keket as much as admitted his guilt.

The story told by the informers is virtually the same as that which the county detective gleaned from his previous investigations, and which was printed in The Tribune. The only additional light thrown on the affair was the animus which moved the assailants in their attack on Novack. He is a Pole, it appears, and the others are Hungarians. There is bad blood between the members of these two races in that locality and quarrels have not been infrequent. Novack was especially disliked by the Hungarians and when this particular crowd of these became intoxicated they aggravated him by throwing stones at his house, and when he came out, threw stones at him.

Novack was, if anything, a little worse last night.
