A very pretty wedding occurred on Wednesday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Robinson, on Susquehanna avenue, when their only daughter, Isabella, was married to John Pyne. The cer-mony took place at 8 o'clock in the presence of about one hundred and fifty guests. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. Robert R. Thompson, pastor of the Baptist church, of which the bride was a member. William Pyne. brother of the groom, acted as best man and his wife was bridesmaid. In keeping with the wedding march, played by Mrs. Kent Jones, the bridal party entered the parlor, the groom and best man preceding and followed by the bridesmaid and then the bride leaning on the arm of her father. As the words which made them man and wifwere pronounced "O Promise Me" was played by Mrs. Jones on the organ. The house was very prettily decorated with running pine and after the ceremony was over a bountiful repast served to the guests. Mr. and Mrs. Pyne were the recipients of many presents. They will, for the present, make their home with the bride's parents.

The burglars, who have been disturbing the peaceful slumbers of our townspeople have apparently became religiously inclined. Their entrances this week have been made in the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, evidently in search of the silver communion sets. Nething of great value was taken by them at either time. It would undoubtedly be a good thing for these thieves if they would go into churches more but at times when divine services are They are certainly in need of religious instruction and worthy missionary subjects. The pastors and prople of all the churches extend a hearty welcome to these ramblers of the night to come within their churches when stated services are being held, and will endeavor to bring about a reformation within their lives that may save them from less years of life behind prison bars than now awaits them in their present course.

BUNCOERS ABROAD : BEWARE !

It is the trick of the Bryanized Democracy this fall to make false charges against Republican methods, raise a big dust, hire Republican malcontents to organize Republican bolts and then coax individual Republicans to desert their party on the representation that "party ties needn't count for anything in an off year." By this trick, if it shall work, the Bryanites will get a foothold for a hopeful fight in national campaigns, and make just so much more trouble for McKinley, the Repullican congress and the cause of sound morey.

You now see through this trick. Ar you going to let it work?

Narrative, the Perusal of Which Will Help to Reconcile Americans to America.

From the New York Sun.

Here is the story of a European hapening which illustrates many features of life on the continent. It illustrates most notably the great gulf fixed between the prince and the merchant and between the nobility and the bourgeoisie. It illustrates also the emasculating influence of continental custom and tradition upon the manhood of the husband and the brother, laming their arms and blunting their sense of shame against the insults that come from itled sources

Prince Fasula-Mirsa was a lieutenant in the Forty-third Russian dragoons, stationed at Twer. Last month he went on his summer furlough with Count Sheremeteff. They rode a little and drank a little, and eventually took a train at Patigorsk to continue their spree in a large town at the other end of the line. They entered a firstclass compartment, in which they found a young merchant and his attractive wife. The Prince threw kisses at the young wife, kissed her hand, and nade as if to embrace her. She shrank away toward her husband, and the Prince desisted. The Count and the prince had some jesting conversation as regarded the young woman's offishness. They fell to betting on the size of her ankle. The prince dived down and grasped her foot, pulled away her skirts, and tried to take the measure of her ankle. The train was drawing into a station at this stage of the princely diversion. The husband had made no effort to protect his wife, for he had heard the prince addressed as "the serene," and apparently felt helpless in such an august presence. But the young woman was not ready to offer herself up in public to a Prince's pleasure, and screaming and weeping she pushed open the compartment door. The conductor of the train came. She told him of her experience. The station master was called. The Prince laughed and showed his card, and called the group at the compartment door canaille. Eventually the conductor declared he could do nothing except give the merchant and his wife seats in another compartment. This he did. He was punished, however, for depriving the Prince of his amusement. The Prince seized him by the collar, shook him, waved his drawn sword over him, and called him an impertinent dog. OTHER VICTIMS. Before the train started the prince and count moved into another firstclass compartment. There they found a Muscovite school teacher named Gevashoff and his wife. Mrs. Gevashoff was neither young nor pretty, as was the merchant's wife, but as a woman of the bouregeoisie she was regarded as good game for the nobility, and all the insults and familiarity that had been tried in the other compartment were repeated by the prince and the count. Mr. Gevashoff began to protest, but one view of "the serene" one's card calmed him, so that he allowed his wife to be insulted and handled without making further protest. At the next station, Ossentuki, Mrs. Sevashoff appeared at the compartment window crying for help. The station officials, train guards, and the general public gathered at the compartment loor, heard her story, and tried to redress her wrong, but promptly yielded to that magic card of "the serene" ruffian, reinforced by the crested card of the Count of Sheremeteff.

There was a delay of twenty-five minates. The train was held while the police were consulted. The chief of police approached the august persons who had caused all the trouble. The prince drew his sword and shouted: "Back, back, canaille! Back or I will

new you down." The upshot of the scrimmage was that the second pair of the prince's victims had to follow the example of the first pair: they fled to another coupe and locked the door behind them so as to keep the two titled rowdies out, Then the train started on. At the next station the count embraced a waiting passenger's wife and kissed her. When the husband called to him to stop the count drew a short driving whip from his cavalry boot and cut the husband over the cheek with it. The prince displayed his card, and the indignant populace, suddenly humbled, slunk into the background once more

It is not necessary to follow this precious pair step by step from the be ginning of the trip to the terminus of the road; the rest of the journey was like the part already described. Two or three more wives were insulted, but no husband's hand was raised to avenge them. However, the prince came to grief, despite all his "serenity" and titles and exalted associations at court. His conduct was complained of in St. Petersburg. The war department sent out an order for a courtmartial. The court-martial was held and, like most other Russian things ordered from St. Petersburg, it was no joke or mere formality. The prince was found guilty; he was deprived of his commission, and he was degraded to the rank of a private soldier. Similar punishment was meted out to the count. Thus the husbands who allowed their wives to be handled and insulted and terrified by a stranger, merely because he bore the title of prince have their revenge at last, such as it is. Of course it might have been less satisfactory than this. In Germany, for instance, a mere count or baron after such a debauch often gets nothing more than a transfer to another garrison.
