NARROW ESCAPE OF A FAMOUS CAT

Strange Battle of a Bird and Feline on an Engine Cab.

COMBAT ROYAL AT 40 MILES AN HOUR

"White Wings" That Have Grown Weary—A Flock of Wild Geese That Were Charmed by Music—Bill Tyler's Encounter With a Big Black Snake.

Special to the Scranton Tribune. Susquehanna, Oct. 26.—That famous cat, which has been the constant companion of an engineer on the Delaware and Hudson road for some years, narrowly escaped an inglorious death on Saturday. For a week past the engineer and fireman had noticed a large eagle sitting in a hemlock tree, near the tracks at South Windsor. Whenever it saw the cat it would flash its wings and show signs of anger. The cat would sit upon the running board of the locomotive, paying no attention to the huge bird. On Saturday morning, when the train left Lansboro, the cat crawled out upon the pilot of the locomotive and prepared for an eye-to-eye battle. Rounding a curve near South Windsor the engineer noticed the eagle sitting in his accustomed tree in the old hemlock tree. When the locomotive was just opposite the tree the eagle, with a loud scream, dashed down upon the pilot and fiercely attacked the cat, which at once put up a good fight. For several seconds there was a battle royal. The eagle made half a dozen attempts to carry away the cat bodily, but each time the cat would make a savage onslaught on the bird with teeth and claws, and the air was full of feathers. As the train dashed ahead the two men in the cab looked upon the strange battle with much apprehension, fearing the result. The whistle was blown, but neither combatant noticed the sound in the least. The engineer armed himself with a bar of iron and started out upon the running board to aid his pet, but before he reached the scene of action the cat had torn a great hole in the eagle's throat, and the bird was in its death struggle. It was carried into the locomotive tender, where it died in a few minutes. The cat crawled into the cab, considerably the worse for wear, but still in the ring. The cat no longer ventures outside the cab.

NEWS IN A NUTSHELL.

The funeral of Patrick Casey, an old and esteemed resident, occurred from St. John's Catholic church on Sunday afternoon. High mass was celebrated on Monday morning. The Board of Trade will take early action toward organizing a "Village Improvement Society."

SIDE ISSUES.

Both Low is beginning to think that he has been the recipient of a very well-aimed brick. Russell Sage made a bad break when he said he would give his soul to have the newspaper reporters suppressed. Just like Russell. He wanted something for nothing.

COUNTY CURRENCY.

The marriage of Dr. McNamara and Miss Mabel Iarrabus will occur in Thomson on Wednesday. The county commissioners have awarded a slice of the county printing to the Susquehanna Transcript and Ledger.
