VICTIMS NUMBER SIX

and Fire Boss Hill was overcome. Yankowski and young Moran picked him up and carried him back out of the deadly gas. He was revived by dousing water on his head, and again the wandering was taken up.

SUGGESTED THE DIP.

Yankowski about this time suggested that they go down into the dip, where the hand fan was erected, and which, because of it being the lowest place in the vein, would be last for the smoke They told him he didn't know what he was talking about, and besides, it would be impossible to get the fan down to the rondway, as it was firmly anchored on a ledge of rocks team of mules couldn't pull it down," one of them remarked. At 11.30 o'clock a, m, the smoke which had been pursuing them in the rear incressed in volume. They realized that it would not be much longer before it would be upon them. Just about this time smoke was discovered in front. the four-foot vein as far as the head They were now in Moffitt's heading. of the fatal plane, but were driven The route up the plane had been discussed and there being now no other avenue of escape open they resolved

It was possible, they figured, that the fire was in the Diamond road, between the slope and the shaft, and that the smoke was coming out of the slope end. In that case, they thought, they could make a dash through the smokefilled workings around the opening of the New Diamond vein, past the angle where the slope and Diamond vein proper met and then up the plane to the Four foot vein above; reaching here they could walk over the region of the fire and descend by the ladders in the perpendicular man-way to the farther end of the Diamond road, on the opposite side of the fire, where they believed, because of the air current possibly having been changed, no smoke

A DESPERATE CHANCE.

They knew the plane had some smoke in it, but thought it was only what little eddied up there from the general current which shot out of the old Diamond road and up the slope.

They took the chance and lost. The smoke was coming down the slope and into the workings instead of out of the workings and up the slope. The plane, which pointed upwards almost opposite the slope, was filled with the biggest volume of the smoke, for it was by this channel that the fans of the air-shaft was sucking it up to the

All ignorant of this, they blindly dashed out of the New Diamond vein and up the plane. Yanwokski, strange to say, went up farther than anybody else. He only was able to go about 75 feet. Like a flash it was shown to them that they were getting into denser smoke at every bound and all, as if by one impulse, turned and started to retrace their steps.

Yankowski says that when he was rushing back, "de one-leg fellow," meaning Welsh, "he say I'm gone. Say good-bye to my people, Joe." Hill was down on his knees with his face towards the ground, and when passing him Yankowski heard him call out: Say good-bye to my wife and children, Joe." The others were scattered along at short distances, but they had In the olio will be seen Campbell and evidently collapsed, as none of them were heard to utter even a moan. Yanians, Howard and Bland as the Rube | kowski says that Walsh was stuffing and the Kid, Edgar Bixley, the musical the tail of his coat into his mouth, when he caught the last glimpse of him. Thinking this to be a good plan, Yankowski imitated it, but he found it impeded his running and he gave it

> Just how he got out of the plane he diesn't know. All he remembers is that he held his breath and ran as fast as his rapidly declining strength would allow. His head was bursting, he says, and his heart was throbbing so hard that he could hear it, he im-

TUMBLED INTO A DITCH. He got down the plane and some distance out into the new Diamond workings, how far he doesn't know. He had stumbled repeatedly, but each time picked himself up and ran or crawled on his hand knees until finally nature gave way under the strain and he collapsed. Luckily he tumbled into the ditch at the side of the road, The souse into the water revived his consciousness for the moment, and with remarkable presence of mind he tore off a piece of his woolen shirt and covering his face with it, ducked his head in the water, held it there as long as he could, then breathed through the flannel; then ducked into the water again, then came up for breath. This operation was continued for about ter minutes he thinks. At the end of that time he felt his strength returning and he started back to the "dip," where he wanted his companions to go in the first place. By stopping occasionally to refresh himself by the process just described, he finally reached the "dip." The smoke grew thinner the farther he went back and at the "dip" he found the condition such that he could get a fairly good breath through his woolen strainer when he would lie close to the ground His first move was to get the fan, This is a machine standing about three feet high, with a revolving set of blades about a foot in length, worked by a hand lever. It is used to reinforce the air current in new workings where the system of circulation has not been wholly perfected.

He loosened the iron fasteningswhich his now dead companions thought a team of mules would not budge-with one desperate wrench. Next he secured a miner's tool box, in dimensions about 3 by 3 by 4, tore off the lid, placed it on end, with the back towards the direction from which the smoke was coming, set the fan so that the air was forced toward the box and then got inside. From 12 o'clock noon until nearly 10 o'clock at night, when he was rescued, he sat in the box working the fan with his face as close to the revolving blades as he could get it. Two or three times he paused long enough to rush to a miner's box here or there nearby to get supplies as a provision against a long siege. When found he had a pile of candles, a bag of oats, a can of oil and several dinner pails containing food, piled up around him. The two mules which were still further down in the "dip." were found unharmed where they had been left and were feeling well enough to eat a double supply of oats yesterday morning. Yankowski says he knew the mine so well because he used to carry the tape for the surveyor. Had his companions taken his advice they might all be living now.

STORY OF THE RESCUE. The story of the rescue is a brief one, but it is none the less heroic. Inside

Foreman Harry Birbeck, Fireboss Patrick Campbell, Samuel Oakley, foreman at the Dickson colliery; William Little ohn, fireboss at Leggett's Thomas Cullen, mule boss at the Von Storch, and Tallie Williams, an experienced miner, descended the slope when the fire had been gotten under control at 9.30 o'clock Saturday night and climbing over the 160-foot face reached the new Diamond workings.

Just inside the Tulley gate they found a board across the track, on which Fireboss Hill had written: "We have gone to Moffitt's." Arrived at Moffitt's heading they found another board which read: "We have gone to the dip." They had gone in that direction, but came back again to Moffit's, as already described. The last-named sign-hoard, however, directed the rescuer to Yankowski, and when they reached there he heard them and called out. He hurriedly told them the sad situand held in place by braces made of inch-thick wrought iron pipe. "A him to the surface, while others looked after the removal of the bodies. Yankowski, after receiving refreshments at the company office, was able to walk to his home on Gardner avenue.

John G. Jennings Will Rebuke Men Who Have Unwarrantedly Used His Name for Campaign Purposes.

For several weeks the Democratic ampaign orators and newspapers have been abusing C. E. Pryor, the Republican candidate for sheriff, alleging that he had treated John G. Jennings, of Minooka, unfairly. How false thesstatements are is shown by the following, which appeared in yesterday's

"Mr. Jennings is a fair man, and resterday in an interview with a Scranonian reporter, which took place in the presence of five reliable witnesses. he bore the strongest testimony to Mr. Pryor's worth as a man, stating that he had known him ever since he opened the grocery store he used to keep it Minooka, and that he had always found him an honest, square fellow in every sense of the word. He further said that Mr. Pryor had done him no wrong personally; that Mr. Pryor had merely acted on the advice of the lawyers en-gaged in the case. He concluded by saying that he did not wish to be the leans of doing any man a wrong, and pledged himself openly to support him with his vote at the polls on Tuesday.

"Mr. Jennings' manly action in this matter is an unanswerable rebuke to Mr. Pryor's cowardly traducers, and stamps their campaign methods with the infamy they justly deserve." Mr. Jennings' statement was made

ADVICE GIVEN TO GOOD CITIZENS

From City Pulpits Reference Was Made to the Coming Election.

SACREDNESS OF THE

Much Dwelt Upon by the Speakers Dr. Giffin Said a Bad Citizen Might Better Stay Away from the Polls and Do Their Country Some Service. Rev. David Jones Draws Comparisons -- Rev. Mr. Grant on Duty of Ministers.

From many of the pulpits of the city yesterday came sound, wholesome general advice about the duties of citizens in easting their ballots Tuesday.

The announcement that "How to Vote" would be the evening sermon topic of Rev. Dr. C. M. Giffin attracted to Elm Park shurch an audience even larger than the usual large evening audience at that place of worship. The pews and chairs in the main auditorium and the balcony seats and chairs were filled.

Giffin text was Deuteronomy 1:13 "Take you wise men, and under-standing, and known among your tribes, and I will make them rulers over you." The words were used by a tried officer who wished to be retired ard was advising as to his successer; he was telling his hearers how they should vote.

To be sure and vote was Dr. Giffin's first point, a piece of advice he gave only good citizens. Bad citizens might better stay away from the polls and do their country some service, but it was an unfortunate fact that the corrupt element were more alert than their Godly bretheren to exercise the franchise of citizenship. In fact many of them were too willing to vote as many times a day as there were rewards prospect. This very condition of things was a weighty reason why decent people should be awake to the necessity of going to the polls and votshould be cast with brains, said Dr. Giffin and not from the should-er. A vote should be for principle. words " and known among your tribes" as found in the text were unfortunate as they showed a sectionlism and the jestousy of the groups, too much factionlism and regard for nationality prejudices and not enough oncern about manhoed. One should vote as he prays, Dr. Giffin remarked. Some suppose that this would change the relative size of the parties but the speaker believed that the man on the other side might be just as plous as himself. He suggested that the rule be changed so as to read "Pray as you vote."

"I adjure you." Dr. Giffin concluded, by the living God, whose I am and whom I preach, that on Tuesday you remember the White Throne as you deposit your white ballot.

SELLING HIS BIRTHRIGHT. Rev. David Jones, paster of the Welsh Congregational church, West Scranton, preached a sermon last evening that had special reference to the coming election. His theme was the selling of his birthright by Esau, to his brother Jacob for a mess of pottage. Comnencing with the family life of these young men's parents, he showed how a nistaken partiality of the father and mother told unfavorably upon the character of the two sons, then dealng with the character of the two sons, showed wherein lay the strength and the weakness of both. He gave a few good hits to Jacob in passing and dealt out some praise to Esau, but failed not to point out his inherent weakness, and showed how this led to his down-

The question of the birthright suggested the main topic of the discourse and this was the selling of the qualification to vote in election. He said that he knew and could prove that in various places and at different times voters had sold their electoral rights, and in scathing words showed the utter unmanliness of such voters.

His language was trenchant and to he point and judging from the marked attention of the people the sermon must have produced good effect. The reverend gentleman did not tell the people how to vote, but he urged upon them the duty and the privilege of voting conscientiously, and in the fear of God.

He said that if people bartered away their votes that they placed themselves upon the same low level as Esau in selling his birthright; that they should not do this, for they could not get an equivalent; that the privilege of voting was a dearly purchased right; and that by exercising this right the poorest coan was on a level with the richest.

DUTY OF A MINISTER. Rev. H. A. Grant, B. D., pastor of the Howard Place African Methodist Episcopal church, in his sermon last evenng in part said:

Being a man of lawful age, I have the ight and as a citizen of this country, hough a minister, to give expression to ny thoughts on any social question, and politics is among the group of these questions, which makes it my duty, by virtue of my ministry, to do all in my power for the growth of social reformation. The clergy cannot, without being recreant to their high calling,, be indifferent to great reforms. Their attitude should be a most positive one and their action aggressive. Politics, properly understood, is a science, and the science of good govern-ment, based on the moral law. This once understood, is well worth the closest study of every minister. There can be no question as to the duty of ministers and preachers of religious truths to teach the great fundamental truths which under lie all politics.
