THE SCRANTON TRIBUNE --- WEDNESDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 3, 1897.

Gravity road, yesterday morning, left the track and four cars were badly wrecked. The accident was caused by the breaking of the link between the first and second car. The wreck was soon cleared away, so that work forth one morning to the chase he ordered Mooua, his squaw, to have a choice cut of moose meat boiled for him when he should return, and that she might be reminded of the time he stuck ety. a stake in the snow and made a raight mark out from it in the place where its shadow would then fall. Moqua promised strict compliance, and as he departed she hewed off the desired tidbit with her sharpest stone knife, and, filling her best kokh with clean snow for melting, hung it over the fire. Then she sat down on a bearskin and began embroidering a pair of moccasins with variously dyed porcupine quills. She became so absorbed in the work that the kokh was forgotten till the bark cord that suspended it was burned off, and it spilled its contents on the fire with startling explosion that filled the wigwam with steam and smoke. She lifted the overturned vessel from the embers by a stick thrust into its four-cornered mouth, and when it was cool enough to handle she repaired it with a new ball of bark and the kokh was ready for serving again. But the shadow of the stake had swung so far towards the mark that she knew there was no time to melt snow to boil the dinner. Happily, she bethought her of the great maple behind the wigwam, tapped merely for the provision of a pleasing drink, but the sweet water might serve a better purpose now. So she filled the kokh with sap and hung It over the mended In spite of impatient watching, it presently began to boil, whereupon she popped the ample ration of moose meat into it and set a cake of pounded corn to bake on the tilted slab before the fire. Then she resumed her embroidery, in which the sharp point of each thread supplied its own needle. The work grew more and more interesting So she dreamed and worked, stitch by stitch, while the hours passed unheeded, the shadow crept past mark, the kokh boiled low and the cake gave forth the smell of burning. Alas! the cake was blackened crisp, and the once jucy meat was a shrivelmorsal in the midst of a gummy, dark-brown substance. She snatched kokh and the cake from the fire and then, hearing her husband coming, she ran and hid herself in the nearest thicket of evergreens, for she knew that when he found not wherewith to appease the rage of hunger he would e seized with a more terrible one ainst her. Listening awhile with a quaking neart, and catching no alarming sound out aware instead of an unaccountable silence, she ventured forth and peeped into the wigwam. Worksis sat by the "baby food," but is a most fire eating with his fingers from the kokh, while his face shone with an excellent food for babies expression of supreme content and enoyment. With wonder she watched who are not well nourished. him devour the last morsal, but her wonder was greater when she saw A part of a teaspoonful him deliberately break the earthen pot mixed in milk and given and lick the last vestige of spolled cookery from the shards. She could not restrain a suprised cry, and, disband, James W. Weaver. This condition of affairs was conveyed to Mrs. Weaver and she sud denly pounced down upon the pair and caused their arrest, and with it a sensation. Under the Texas law an injured wife gets half the fine for proseouting such cases, and the Texas court was in a humor to give her and the state its full benefit. Weaver was fined $2,000, and Mrs. Weaver returned with $1,000 in her pocket, having refused an offer of $10,000 if she would get a divorce. The Dallas denouement caused the hasty flight of Weaver and his alleged wife, and the next Mrs. Weaver heard of him he was living on a ranch, but just where she could not learn. She of James Weaver. was on the point of going to Texas to institute another prosecution, when one day, in December, 1885, a man called upon her and said that the masonic lodge of which Weaver was a member had received a letter from him asking for a demit, but the lodge had refused to grant it. When the letter was written Weaver was at Atlanta, Ga., and the purpose of the caller seemed to be to inform the deserted wife of his er, who also knew Weaver well, idenwhereabouts. tified him postively, and so did numeraux other Indianapolis citizens who had HEARS OF HIS DEATH.

The discovery was made public and kokhs of sap were presently boiling in every wigwam. All wore so anxious to get ever atom of the precious sweet that they broke the kokhs and scraped the pieces, just as Workais, the first sugar eater, had done. And that is why there are so many fragments of broken pottery and so few whole vessels to be found -Atlantic Monthly.

Whild they were yet talking the postman delivered a letter to Mrs. Weaver which bore the Atlanta postmark. When opened it contained one of her husband's old business cards and a clipping from the Atlanta Constitution. giving the details of a wreck on the Georgia Pacific railroad, on Dec. 14, in which it was stated that James W. Pierce, a wealthy Texas ranchman,was killed. The clipping stated that Pierce had visited Atlanta with two valuable race horses, had spent money lavishly, and was on his way home when the accident occurred.

There was nothing to indicate who had sent the newspaper clipping and the old business card, but Mrs. Weaver's excited imagination readily supplied all the missing links, and tears filled her eyes as she recalled her happiness before the evil days came upon her, and thought of her truant husband dying among strangers, but in his last moments giving directions that she, instead of Mrs. Eden, should be notified of his death.
