long ages before the things which the civilization of the present day boasts of as being an indisputable and irrefuable evidence of their wonderful enlightenment and scientific advancement.

Man, he said, had never yet and never would be able to produce a geomet-rical point, yet the creator of all things had shown that it was possible in the sting of a bee. He also cited the web of a spider as being the only thread which was delicate and strong enough for use in various astronomical observations. It was beyond the power of man, he saidfi to manufacture such a thread, yet God had solved the problem at the beginning of time.

Long was regarded as a lucky fellow, His friends had sent in two rooms full of gifts. At the last hour a baskelful of more gifts arrived. Two large turkeys were in the oven and other supplies were ready for the wedding feast. The entire house was decorated and extra chairs had been arranged along the walls to sent the guests. The Rey, air, Hunizing- er of St. Luke's Lutheran church, re- cently returned from Europe, had been engaged to perform the ceremony. Shortly before the hour for the wed- ding word came that the bride had sud- denly disappeared. A note had been placed in the family Hible of the Longs addressed to Mrs. Long. It was from the bride. It read: "I hope you will forgive me for leading you to so much trouble, but it's Charley's own fault. If you knew how he treated me you would not wonder why I left. I can never be his wife. You always treated me kindly, but that is not enough to make me a happ wife. To think that he would buy a ring of another stirl at the mill and have me wear it as my wedding ring." There was another note addressed to Charley which has not yet been made public. By a series of photographic charts, Dr. Crafts placed before the audience n tangible form numerous illustrations of the beauties of God's handiwork and compared them with human productions. He contrasted the modern telephone and telegraph with the anclageus instruments supplied by the creator to every individual. The eye, the ear and the brain, he said, were intruments of communication between individuals more perfect and beautiful than could ever be devised by a finite being in any age of the world. Nature's beauties as exemplified in the snowflake, the ice flower and in the flowers of the field were placed by the side of artificial creations and the distinction vividly drawn. These things, said Dr. Crafts, ought to demonstrate beyond question to skeptics and unbelievers that their positions were unten-"What clearer evidence." h concluded, "than this great world itself with all its transcendent loveliness can Mr. Ingersoll and others of his kind want that the existence of the world was not the result of chance?"
