Among those who came to the heavily guarded door during the afternoon was Sheriff Clemons and a woman who was a witness in the case and who was brought on a capias. The tipstayes had orders to allow no one in and the sheriff therefore could not make a proper delivery of his prisoner. The matter was discussed freely about the court house and not a lawyer that expressed an opinion but what believed new trial could be secured on the strength of the star chamber session.

HE DISCHARGED VAN HORN.

William H. Nichols, a Delaware Lackawanna and Western conductor, told of having discharged Van Horn for his peculiarities. One time, while coming south from Glenburn, Van Horn deserted his place at the head of the train saying the engine was going to blow up. He acted very strange and as he did not think him a safe man to have around, discharged him.

George M. Wallace, another Dela-ware, Lackawanna and Western conductor, who is an officer in the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, testified that Van Horn's insurance in that order was made payable to Mrs. Joseph Wescott. It was made out in 1893.

Mrs. Sarah Ann Van Horn, the aged mother of the defendant, told of how her son, after the accident to his head, was oftentimes so affected with pain that he would seize his head in his hands and cry out: "Mother, I can't stand it. My head will burst." Just before the noon recess Van Horn was called to the stand, and with the exception of the interim for dinner, was on the stand until after 3 o'clock. He went over his personal history, told of his travels, his two marriages, how he was hurt in Michigan and then of his relations with Mrs. Wescott.

For the three nights preceding the killing he slept in the Wescott cellar and not a day passed after the time he came from Clark's Summit but that
