In the olden times, physicians accounted wise, searched vainly for the Hlixir of Life, or the knowledge whereby life might be prolonged. We now know that there is no such thing as an Elixir of Life. But we have learned that life may be prolonged by those who take the right measures.

Any man or woman who will take care of health and take the right remedies for ill health, may live to a ripe old age. When a man feels out of sorts, when he gets up in the morning tired out after a restless night, and goes home in the evening completely knocked out with his day's work, without appetite or ambition, he is a sick man. If he does not take the right remedy he will soon be in the grasp of consumption, nervous prostration, malaria, or some other serious malady.

WEST'S PORTRAIT OF NELSON.

Benjamin West's picture of the "Death of Nelson" is closely connected with an anecdote of the great sattor, says The Mail and Express. Just before he went to sea for the last time he was present at a dinner, during which he sat between the artist and Sir William Hamilton. Nelson was expressing to Hamilton his vegret that he had not in his youth acquired some taste for art and some disrimination in judging it.

"But," said he, turning to West, "there one picture whose power I do feel. I never pass a shop where your 'Death of Wolfe' is in the window without being opped by it." West made some gracious answer to West made some gracious answer to the compliment, and Nelson went on: "Why have you painted no more like it?" "Hecause, my lord," West replied, "there are no more subjects." "Ah" said the sailor, "I didn't think of that."

"But, my lord," continued West, "I am afraid your intropidity will yet furnish me with another such scene, and if it should, I shall certainly avail myself of

"Will you?" said Nelson. "Will you, Mr. West? Then I hope I shall die in the next battle!"

ROMAN BATHS RESTORED.

Remodeling of Ancient Structures Uncovered at Bath, England. From the Philadelphia Record

The old Roman baths at Bath, England, have been recently restored and reopened for public use, and an effort is being made to re-establish the ancient fame of that town as a health resort. These baths are said to have been built A. D. 60. Three large Roman villas have also been found in the Bath Valley. These, and a few fragments of paving, altars and tombs, ar the only record of the Aquae Sulis which was finally destroyed and deserted in 577, If we except the Roman baths. These Roman baths were the chief object in the ancient city, and it is assumed that, on the sacking of the place by the Saxons, columns and entablatures were ruthlessly destroyed Conduits which carried off the supernerly of Jermyn, is circulating among fluous hot water were choked up, and that the ceaseless welling up of the mineral water continuing, the area of the baths was flooded. The valuable mineral deposit of the spring of many centuries covered the floors to a depth. in some places, of fifteen feet, but it is to this deposit that is owed the pres ervation of the ancient work. Where that deposit and the mineral flood did not exist the baths became the quarry out of which the builders, Saxon and Norman, procured the material for the monastery, the city walls, and the bishop's palace, which covered a nortion of the site; indeed, stones can be traced in the Abbry church, rebuilt 1,500 and subsequently.

The Roman baths were discovered in The Mesdames Walsh and McAn- 1754, but what was found was in part destroyed and covered up. Previous to 1871, from time to time, fragmentary discoveries were made, but in that Scranton as this one. Great year a fortunate discovery was made which led, about six years later, to the corporation purchasing preperty which enabled excavations and discoveries to be made. This work was continued until the year 1886, te-commenced in 1890, and from that time, with an interval of a year, till June, 1895. In making these restorations every effort was made to treat the magnificent Roman bath in a manner which should be free from the charge of vandalism and yet utilize the space available to the utmost extent. In the new concert room the idea has been to provide ample accommodation for the ever-increasing number of visitors to Bath, the daily concerts having hitherto been given in the historic pump room. The latter will henceforth be devoted exclusively to the water drinkers. The scheme as now completed is, with the exception of the position on plan and the interior of the promen-ade, very different from that originally designed by its architect. Of the remaining portion the first idea was that the Roman bath should be roofed over; new it is open to the sky. Also it was at first proposed that the new subsidiary rooms might be on two or more floors; now they are all on one level with the promenade. But theres points are so important that to carry them out the whole design had to be revised and redrawn. In the result it must be fully admitted that in this case certainly second thoughts have proved to be the best, and as a consequence the architectural composition has gained both dignity and interest. Externally the general design of the building is founded on the architecture of the west front of the old Pump room. On a rusticated basement, the height of the subsidiary rooms, the main block of the promenade stands high above the general level. The north able of the room. In the center of front is now the main entrance leading directly into the north corrider, with windows on each side. Above this, between the columns, is the central three-light window of the promenade, flanked on each side by niches or statues, the pediment over being filled by an enriched and carved circular opening for ventilation. The low buildings are continued on each side, so that the central block stands quite clear of the old Pump room, the dome seing a well-marked feature in the general view. The north, or principal front, is enriched by some excellent carving in the capitals of the columns. the frieze between them, and the pediment-the work of Mr. Aumonier, London, who did all the carving, both in stone and wood. The aim of the architect has been to produce a simple and dignitied building, depending for its effect on the harmony of its propor-

More than twenty years ago, while Hartington was chief secretary for Ireland, some national demonstration in Phoenix park led to a breach of the peace that called out the troops. The disturbance occurred on Sunday, and immediately after the paraders were dispersed, many of them seriously injured, two or three of the leaders hastened to a lawyer and began legal proeedings against Lord Hartington for having incited to a breach of the peace by cailing out the troops. On the day of the alleged riot some friends of the secretary, including Prof. Mahaffy, had been at luncheon at the vice regal lodge in the park, and on their way to the city were witnesses of the dis-turbance. Great amusement was caused by the efforts of lawyers to pin the professor down to an exact meaning of this phrase, and Mahaffy, who is an adept in the arts of bamboozlement, explained himself to the jury in words taken from Latin, Greek and German, which, of course, made the matter perfectly clear to the twelve good men and true.

Hartington was put in the witness box and gave a simple "yes" or "no" to each question. "Did you call out the troops?" "Do you think you were jus-tified in calling them out?" "Do you think it the duty of a secretary to stop a peaceable meeting of citizens by pending armed soldiers to fire upon them?"
