PROPER WAY TO COOK EGGS. The best way to "boil" an egg is to never boll it! Put a quart of water in a covered saucepan on the stove, and when boils furlously, lower into it gently four eggs; remove the saucepan immediately to a table, and allow it to stand (covered) seven minutes if the eggs are not more than a day old, eight or nine minutes if a week old; take them out and they are perfect, a soft, even, yet firm jelly throughout.

To peach-Have a father deep spider nearly full of saited water just below the boiling-point; break the eggs in a saucer and slide them gently into the water; when they have slowly jellied, take them up carefully (to buttered toast slices, to destred), trimming the edges and sea-soning lightly with salt and pepper. To facilitate the taking up (for which a pancake-turner is better than a skimmer) your off most of the water with care. To fry-If not to be served with bacor (when, of course, the bacon fat would be sed), fry in good butter, and when the part next the pan is cooked, stand the pan on the upper grating of the oven to finish, that no part may be overdone.

To "hard boil"—Keep in water just below the boiling-point for half an hour.—

LITERARY ACCIDENTS.

"Nobody is the correct and true judge what any piece of writing is," remarked a journalist of thirty years' ex-perience, "until it has been put into print and served to the people. It is true, they are sometimes mistaken, but it is the exception when they are. It is not necessary for me to cite the stories of "Para-dise Lost," "Innocents Abroad," and a few other classics of that type, for they erature, but I will tell you a story of nother classic. I don't remember dates exactly, but once upon a time, far back, went into an office one day to see about matter of business, and I happened in ust at a time when the force was dissing the maruscript of a book which he readers of the establishment had all taken a tilt at. Its title was "Helen's Bables," and its author was one John Habberton, and a friend of mine. Naturally I was interested, and upon inquiry I was pained to learn that the entire force with the exception of one ordinary girl who was only a sub-reader, had passed adversely, and with promptness, upon the manuscript. Not only that, but they were laughing to scorn the poor sub-reader, who, notwithstanding, insisted that it was the funniest thing she had ver read, and, of its kind, the most entertaining. However, it was a case of many against one, and the manuscript was returned.

"I did not give the matter any further nought just then, but the next day or day after the subject of manuscripts came up in a talk I was having with Soneso of the old publishing firm, and I told him the tale of the rejected manucript, and suggested that in my judgnent the opinion of the girl who repreented the class who bought because they liked them was far better in a business sense than the opinion of critics who udged a book from the critical point of view, critics not being book buyers as a rule. It struck him as a good point, and e asked me to tell Habberton to offer the manuscript to him. "I went after Habberton at the first opportunity, and he went after Soneso. What the readers of the firm thought of the manuscript I never learned. The business end of the firm thought it was good enough to publish and the result than of any book the house ever pubished. So much for the opinion of rom the San Francisco Examiner. What bolls at different temperatures according to the elevation above the sea level. In London water boils practically at 212 degrees Fabrenheit; at Munich, in Germany, at 2094 degrees, at the City of Mexico, at 200 degrees, and in the Himalayas, at an elevation of 18,000 feet above the level of the sea, at 180 degrees. These differences are caused by the varying pressure of the atmosphere at these points. In London the whole weight of the air has to be overcome. In Mexic, 7,000 feet above the sea, there are 7,000 dayas, at an elevation of 18,000 feet above 7.000 feet above the sea, there are 7.000 feet less of atmospher to be resisted, and consequently less heat is required, and boiling takes place at a lower tempera-ture. Boiling water, therefore, is not always equally hot.
