THE MARKETS.

Wall Street Review.

Wall Street Review.

New York, July 12.—There was a notable disparity again today in the activity of the bond and stock market, the volume of transactions in the bond market continuing on a very large scale while the stock market was dull throughout. In the early trading Atchison preferred continued conspicuous and absorbed in very large individual stocks. The demand for this stock diminished before the close, thus removing the only movement of positive strength in the market, which dronged on a small volume of business. The declines were most conspicuous in the stocks which were advanced under manipulation last week, notably Omalia and Northwest. There is an effort to explain the diversion of speculative activity from the stock market to the bond market on the ground that the new revenue law provides no tax on the sale of bonds, although stock sales are taxed at the rate of $2 per 160 shares. Almost infinitesimal tax does in fact loom large in the eyes of the professional room trades, who buy and sell stocks for a small fractional turn on the floor of the exchange. But this class of transactions makes up but a small proportion of the total in an active market. Total sales were 248,600 shares.
