RABID DOG SCARE.

Residents in the neighborhood of Edwards court and Washburn street were thrown into a state of the deepest excitement by the reported presence of a "mad dog" early last evening. Many children were said to have been bitten and naturally everyone kept indoors.

As last some one located the dog under a porch in the rear of the First Welsh Baptist church, on South Main avenue, and one look satisfied him that the dog was surely mad. The eyes glared and the mouth was covered with froth. The dogman immediately sought a patrolman to have the animal shot. Patrolman McColligan gave the dog its quietus.

As a matter of fact, the dog was not mad but had probably been given some poisoned meat and when the poison began to take effect it looked as if the poor beast was mad. No one knew to whom the animal belonged and its body was removed and buried.

OBSEQUIES OF JOSEPH NASH.

Funeral services for the late Joseph Nash were held last evening at the residence, 421 South Ninth street. The attendance of friends and relatives was very large and numerous floral tributes were in evidence. Washington camp, No. 170, Patriotic order, Sons of America, of which the deceased was a member, was largely represented, and conducted part of the service.

Rev. James Benninger, pastor of the Hampton Street Methodist church, officiated and preached a short funeral sermon. The choir of the church rendered the selections. At the conclusion of the services the remains were viewed. This morning the remains will be taken to Salem, Wayne county, where interment will be made.

COST OF ELEPHANTS.

Much Used in the Siamese Malay States as Beasts of Burden. From the Geographical Journal. It is somewhat interesting to compare the weights carried by elephants in the tin-producing districts of the Malay peninsula with those used in the long journeys and mountainous country of the Lao states. In the peninsular districts are seldom more than at most three or four days' march, and the elephant is expected to carry as much as 900 or 1,000 pounds, besides his mahout and howda. The latter is often a mere brace of panniers, slung together so as to rest one on each side of the backbone, and covered sometimes with a light barrel roof of bark. A good tusker which will carry 550 pounds will fetch about £15, and a female which can bear 800 pounds is worth about £45. In the Lao states, where journeys of ten days or three weeks are frequent, the average load exceeds 200 pounds, or one-third of what is usual in the peninsula. The prices in various parts of the country vary considerably. When we visit the Me Kouang and in Muang Nan in 1893 a good tusker could be had for £22 and a female for £24; at Chiang Mai, where good teak-bearing elephants are in great demand, a tusker may fetch £150, and a female anything from £50 to £150, according to her strength and ability.

In the Siamese Malay states there are probably about 1,000 domesticated elephants, all told, and in the Lao country probably over 2,500 animals are working at the present moment. That the animals bred in captivity in Siam is due to the fact that a large number of them spend the great part of their time holiday making in the jungle. When there is no work for his beast, the mahout takes him out to a nice, cool, green bit of forest and leaves him there to enjoy himself. There is no expense connected with his upkeep, for he looks after himself. He has a hobble of rattan around his feet to dissuade him from wandering 100 far, and a wooden belt round his neck, by the tone of which the mahout or his little boy can always find him when he goes out once a month to look him up and give him some bananas.
