A Phase Of the Feminine...

Miss De Guster stepped aboard the car gingerly, with the hesitancy of one accustomed to riding in upholstered carriages. She was so dressed that the women regarded her with envy, the men with admiration. When the trolley, as usual, started the vehicle with a disquieting jerk, she preserved her balance with an effort and then proceeded to sit up very erect indeed, looking straight before her in manifest disapproval of everybody.

It was the expression of conscious superiority lurking in her serene gray eyes that, in a way, confounded and abashed her neighbors. It seemed to add to the charm of her beauty and accentuated the daintiness of her dress. It appeared to say: "I am not in the habit of going about in this way, my good people—believe me, I am not of a different class. I am of society. When I travel abroad I usually go in my mamma's equipage, with the family crest on the panels and men in livery on the box. I am compelled to take a short journey with you this September morning, however, and—I hope you are enjoying the experience as much as I am."

Now it so happened that the seat occupied by Miss De Guster was the one at the forward end of the car, with its back to the motorman. She was consequently compelled to face quite half of the other passengers and to keep their keen, analytical scrutiny with an indifference distinctly thoroughbred. The car filled rapidly, and very soon there were but few seats remaining vacant. Into the narrow space which existed between her and the row—there climbed, at the next stop, the very type of passenger whom the young lady from the Avenue would probably have gone farthest to avoid.

She was a girl—I was going to say, "a woman," but I will not say so, because this girl was of a type so different that, looking at the twin, it was impossible to comprehend how Nature could have fashioned two such beings and linked them together with the same word "human."

The newcomer was perhaps twenty years old. She had a lean figure, ungracefully displayed by a frayed gingham dress. She had a head of curly hair, cropped short at the back of the neck, and her large blue eyes shone with a defiant, defiant stare. Her hair was a red one, and was soiled. Her hands were not well kept and there were expensive rings on them. Yet with it all, she had a certain beauty that was undeniable.

Miss De Guster looked secretly, but preserved her composure. She would have done the same thing if called upon to swim from a sinking yacht or submit without warning to the amputation of a limb. She had been immersed in the Delaware and Hudson breaker and Lackawanna river.

The car flew on. The passengers in the opposite seat were, as our little brothers would say, "taking it all in." Miss De Guster, who had borne with resignation the mere inspection of her clothes, lost patience when this undesirable person had stared rudely into her very eyes. The delicate pink of her cheeks flushed momentarily to a crimson richness. She now despised her neighbor as formerly she had despised her. So they rode on side by side, each wishing the other a thousand miles away.

At the next corner two people got out and the place in the seat opposite was taken by a soldier, in uniform, in uniform. His face was sunken from tropical service, and he looked deplorably weak and ill. In fact, he had scarcely seated himself before his head fell back and he collapsed, in a half-fainting condition.

With the spring of a panther, the Tough Girl was at his side. She coiled a lean arm about his neck, pilloved his head on the frayed gingham dress and swiftly opened his blouse at the throat. He was a rough-looking fellow. Perhaps that was why she now glared with defiance and jealousy, at the girl from the Avenue, as much as to say: "Belongs to my class. He is, therefore, mine. You shan't touch him."

The girl from the Avenue looked mystified. But at the same time very concerned and sympathetic. After an instant's hesitation, she drew forth an odd little silver filigree-work, and handed it to her enemy, saying softly, "Try this, please; I am sure it will revive him."

The offering was accepted, albeit with a bad grace. After two or three sniffs, the soldier sat up, and the conductor came to inquire, in most solicitous fashion, at what street he wished to stop. It happened that the girl had already reached her destination, for without thinking either of his Samaritanism, and with an oath that severely shocked at least one of them, he signified in the same breath his contempt for his weakness and his desire to alight. They watched him walk painfully up the steps of the hospital on the corner and then—

"Thank you," said Miss De Guster, civilly, as she took back her vinaigrette, and added, without knowing why, "you see, I had a-a-a friend in the Rough Riders."

MOUNT LOWE SEARCHLIGHT. Its Rays Covers a Distance of About 150 Miles. From the Electrical Review.

All European travelers will recall with pleasure the charming effects obtained in the mountains of Switzerland by turning flashlights of colored rays on nearby mountain cascades. At the summit of Mount Lowe, in California, this idea is applied on a scale and under atmospheric conditions never before available. The glass searchlight which was placed on the top of the Liberal Arts building, was one of the well remembered sights of the World's Fair. As its rays were projected upward to the northward on the passing steamer or on the heavy clouds of the "Midway," it constituted an untiring source of contentment and awakened endless curiosity, but it is doubtful if the inventor of that appliance himself had any idea of the latest possibilities of his instrument under conditions such as obtain at the summit of Mount Lowe.

Until this great searchlight was established in its present location its powers could not be brought out, on account of its location so near the general level of the surrounding country. Here, however, it is so located that its rays can be sent for 150 miles out on the ocean, and the most distant mountain peaks can be made visible. The beam of light is so powerful that its full sweep illuminates the peaks of mountains which are hundreds of miles apart.

It is of 3,000,000 candle power and stands on a wooden base, built in octagon form, which has a diameter of about 8 feet. The searchlight itself stands about 11 feet high, and its total weight is 6,000 pounds, yet it is so perfectly mounted and balanced that a child can move it in any direction. The reflecting lens is 4 1/2 inches thick at the edges and only 1 1/4 of an inch thick at the center, and weighs about 800 pounds. The metal ring in which the lens is mounted weighs about 750 pounds, the total weight of lens, ring and cover being about 1,600 pounds. This great mirror is mounted at one end of a big drum, the outer end of which is furnished with a door, consisting of a narrow metal rim, in which are fixed a number of rollers, each of which is 1/2 of an inch thick and 6 inches wide.

No Objections. "No, Herbert, I am sorry, but I am sure we could not be happy together. You know I always want my own way in everything."

DR. WURTH'S OPINION OF THE NEW DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE. A Remarkably Successful Remedy for Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Stomach Troubles.

Dr. Wurtz in commenting on recent discoveries in medicine, said: "There is none which is certain to be so valuable and far-reaching in benefit as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, the new stomach remedy; I say far-reaching, because people little realize how important a sound stomach and vigorous digestion is to every man, woman and child."

Indigestion is the starting point of consumption, heart disease, Bright's disease, diabetes, nervous prostration, liver troubles; why is this so? Simply because every nerve, muscle and tissue in our bodies is created and nourished from the food we eat. If that food is, by reason of a weak stomach, compelled to stay for hours, a sour, fermenting mass of half digested food, it poisons the blood and nervous system, creates gas which distends the stomach and bowels, causing pressure on the heart, lungs and other organs, and seriously impeding their action.

He says further, the point to direct attention is not the nerves, nor heart, nor lungs, nor kidneys, but the stomach, the first cause of all the mischief. The remedy to use for indigestion and weak stomachs is not some cathartic, but a remedy which will digest the food, increase the flow of gastric juice, absorb the gases, and Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will accomplish exactly this result in any case of stomach trouble, because these tablets are composed of the digestive acids, aseptic pepsin, Golden Seal and bismuth, pleasant to taste, and not being a patent medicine, can be used by anyone with perfect safety. I believe Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will cure any form of indigestion and stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

Full size packages of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold by druggists at 25 cents or by mail from Dr. A. Stuart, Co., Marshall, Mich. A book on stomach diseases, together with thousands of testimonials, will be sent by addressing above or call on your druggist for them.
