HONORED IN DEATH. Many Friends Attend the Funeral of A. F. Yost.

His words were chosen as something that would explain the meaning of sorrow. He referred to the deceased as a cheerful, unselfish man and spoke of his kindness and friendly nature as one who would stop by the roadside and speak with the children.

HOPKINSON SMITH GREETED AGAIN. GENIAL AUTHOR FETED AT J. BEN DIMMICK'S HOME.

Mr. and Mrs. Dimmick Entertained Last Night and Mr. Smith Was Their Guest—Interior of the Beautiful Residence Was Profusely Decorated for the Occasion—Author Gave Selected Readings from His Works—Characters Therein, Persons in Real Life.

No social event of the year has been anticipated with so much interest among those who have most leisure for literature, as the delightful evening at the beautiful colonial residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. Ben Dimmick, on North Washington street, when Mr. F. Hopkins Smith afforded a select audience another intellectual feast.

Invitations to this charming suburban home are always much appreciated and when an additional invitation of this favorite writer and artist was afforded with the opportunity of meeting him informally, the event was one of unusual interest.

A cold on the chest. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A cure in a night. The listeners were delighted to again meet "Caleb West," the book which really should be called "Caleb West." The cruise of the Dolly Varden and the almost tragic placing of the pump was read with great dramatic effect. The pathetic, strongly drawn scenes between Caleb and the captain, while the latter was pleading for Betty, held the audience in a tense strain of sympathy. The finale was humorous in the character sketch of "Never Had No Sleep," and the personal reminiscence of a Vermont town which, because of this particular destination in "Five Meals for a Dollar," had not since shown a wild yearning for a return date of the speaker. At the conclusion of the programme, Mr. and Mrs. Dimmick and Mr. Smith greeted the guests, who enjoyed a chat with the genial author. Sumner was served in the dining room and morning room and it was a late hour before they could leave the delightful surroundings. Mr. Smith was entertained at dinner last evening by Mr. and Mrs. Dimmick. He arrived from Washington in the afternoon, where he had been much feted by men of high official position and where he was also the guest of President McKinley. He will leave this morning for Columbia, O. FULLER—SCRANTON NUPTIALS Ceremony Occurred at the Bride's Residence Last Night. The marriage of Miss Katherine Scranton to Mr. Charles Ruthven Full-
