James Gardner Sanderson's name appears quite frequently of late in magazine literature. The most recent work of his pen is "The Professor." a short story in the Cosmopolitan. It indicates a certain directness of view and a facility of action usually acquired only after long practice. The portrait of the old professor stands out with the clearness of a silhouette and yet with the melting twillight hues of a pastel. The plot is marked with simplicity and natural finish and there is a clever little touch of grace in the climax that is not easily imitated. Read it for yourself.

Lieutenant Governor Gobin is never tired of singing the praises of the Thir-teenth regiment. The other day he grew enthusiastic while talking to a man who happened not to be a Scrantonian, "Well, just let me tell you right now." he exclaimed, "that I was prouds of that corps, and, above all, I was proud of the Thirteenth regiment. There isn't one that surpasses and for drill work I'd turn it out against anything in the country. Another thing," he continued, "they've a lot of good officers, but Major Wood is the first on the list. There isn't a finer officer in the army than that same Major Wood and you can put it down." Just you watch that young man. Oddly enough, a Honesdale soldier who heard of this tribute to his townsman said decisively: "Now that's all right. The major is a mighty good fellow and all the boys like him, but when you talk about popularity there's not a blamed one of 'em that can touch Frank Robling."

The probem of what to do with the camp garand refuse was one that assumed gigantic proportions. Finally Quartermaster Coxe was asked to devise at thing which would dispose of this great accummulation of disease breeding matter. Lieutenant Albert Sloan was called into assist in the deliberations and the two drew plans and secured iron from the navy yard and built a

Dobbs sized up McDonald early in the first round and then began the rapid infighting for which he is famous. When the bell sounded at the onclusion of the first round he had McDonald almost out and the police refused to allow the contest to procoed. The match was for a purse of $2,500 and a side bet of $1,000.

At the Bar of Public Opinion.

The Lake Shore Railway is without doubt the most popular railroad connecting the east with the west. It is the only doube track road between Boston, New York, Chicago and other points west, and public opinion without doubt would give the Lake Shore the palm of excellence. High speed, perfect safety, excellent road bed, comfortable coaches, and courteous attendants have all helped to give it its present high standing. If you wish to save time and money and yet secure the best, see that you buy your ticket via the Lake Shore railroad.
