"The Worker," published in Pittsburgh in the interest of the Christian Church or Disciples of Christ, in its issue of March 1, has this to say of Rev. D. M. Kinter, pastor of the Christian church of Indiana, Pa., formerly pastor of the Providence Christian church: "Brother D. M. Kinter, of Indiana, was a large place in the admiration of the Bankville people by his kindly social qualities and two fine sermons. The sermon on 'The Power of a Shadow' especially pleased them. He not only speaks highly of his lecture to them Saturday night, Brother Kinter is also one of the most impressive Scripture readers I have ever heard. He is going to work in Indiana which tells to the dignity of our real plea, Christian unity. Although Indiana is his boyhood home, there like others he was one of the boys, and he is held in very high esteem. One competent admirer said he was 'The Tailor of Indiana.' I am told by his people that he enjoys the luxury of preaching to large audiences. He is certainly a most agreeable man to work with in a meeting."

BURGLAR SHANNON'S CONDITION SERIOUS

STATEMENT HE MADE TO A TRIBUNE REPORTER.

His Home Is In Shamokin and He Is a Tinsmith by Trade—Has Been In This City Only a Few Days. Did Not Know All of His Companions—Interview with Station Agent Broad—He Describes the Battle Fought in the Dark—Police Trying to Find Shannon's Companions.

There is little to add to the almost complete and exclusive story in The Tribune of yesterday of the attempt of burglars to loot the Peckville station of the Delaware and Hudson railroad early yesterday morning, which resulted so disastrously to one of the gang, John Shannon, the wounded man, who was captured, is at the Lackawanna hospital in a precarious condition, and so far none of the others in the gang have been caught, though it seems almost certain that one or two of them were wounded.
Shannon's wound is a dangerous one. A full charge of bird shot struck him in the right breast, penetrating to the left shoulder blade, penetrating at least an inch and a half. The shot did not scatter and carried a piece of the clothing into the wound like a waif. If blood poisoning does not follow, this might be his salvation, as it is a piece of cloth may be his savior, as it prevented the shot going deeper.
However, it is feared that some of the fine particles of shot went through into the lung cavity, perhaps penetrating the left lung itself. The wounded man has great difficulty in breathing and says he feels like hiccupping and drawing a breath and coughing. A piece of cloth was used to stop the wound and the shot was picked out of the wound at the hospital yesterday morning and his condition seemed to grow better as the day advanced.

SHANNON'S STORY.

Shannon's story to a Tribune reporter bore some marks of truth, as if he wavered between a full confession and a fear of the results of such an act. He stated that his home was in Shamokin, where he resided with a married sister. This sister's name he refuses to tell, saying: "I do not want her to know until I really have to go, if I get worse." He made this statement apparently in disregard of the fact that the name he gave as his right one will be published broadcast. When his sister was called to this he just looked indifferently at the reporter.
It was later discovered that her name is Mrs. John Brennan and that she resides on Shamokin street.
Continuing, he said: "I am a tinsmith by trade and was out of work for some time. I had a knock around about two weeks ago and got as far as Waverly, N. Y. I came to this town a few days ago and put up at a lodging house on Lackawanna avenue. Last night (Tuesday night), Benninger, a fellow I met here, says: 'Let's take a trip up today.'"
"He paid the fare and we went. We got off at Peckville, getting there, I guess, about 10:30 or 11 o'clock. There was no one around but two young fellows and we got talking to them. They said they were from Waverly, N. Y., but I did not know their names. When Shannon stopped to think it over, though he had a ready answer for the questions which brought out the story. When asked what they went into the station for when it was locked up, he said simply "to sleep."

PLACE SURROUNDED.

"Then the trouble followed," he went on. "For those other fellows started to ransack the place and pretty soon the place was surrounded. We all made a dash for the outside and I got shot."
"Who shot you?" was asked.
"The fellow with the gun and I was only about twenty feet from him. The other fellows scattered," he answered.
"What did your fellows shoot for?" was the next query.
"I didn't shoot. Didn't have anything to shoot with. I was trying to get away from the shooting as fast as I could," he answered, quickly.

Shannon is about five feet, six or seven inches tall, weighs about 155 pounds and is a well built young man. He gives his age as twenty years. On the back of his right wrist is a deep scar about the size of a silver dollar, as if burned into the flesh. On his left forearm near the elbow is a shield-shaped tattoo mark, in the center of which "In Memory of My Mother." On the right forearm is a tattooed star. He is smooth shaven and boyish looking, with an open and not vicious appearing face. He has a peculiar cast in both eyes and his hair is of that shade between sandy and Auburn. He says he is unmarried, lives in Philadelphia, on Spring Garden street.
Benninger, his "pal" of a few days, is about four years older. He is a heavier built fellow and rati-fied looking. He wore a dark suit and a water hat, with a slouch hat. He told Shannon that he belonged to Sunbury. Shannon also said that neither of them had ever been up this way before and were never in Wilkes-Barre, at least he wasn't.

FOUND AN ACQUAINTANCE.

Late in the afternoon Shannon recognized one of the patients of the medical ward who came down into the surgical ward as a former resident of Shamokin. The man is Patrick Igo and the two talked awhile. In the evening, when Shannon began to feel worse, he had Igo write a letter for him to his sister in Shamokin, stating where he was and in what condition. He told Igo that he was not in any manner connected with any of the burglaries hereabouts and never saw Shannon, the burglar who was shot at Delaware Water Gap two weeks ago.
W. J. Broad, the fearless agent at the Peckville station, was warmly congratulated yesterday on the escape of himself and his companions from injury in their battle with the burglars. To a Tribune reporter Mr. Broad said yesterday:
"A burglar alarm connects my residence with the station, half a mile away, and at 11:45 o'clock last night it informed me that some one had entered the building. I dressed and securing the assistance of Chief of Police E. L. Craig and Theodore Dikeman started for the station. Craig had a revolver and Dikeman and I were armed with double-barrelled shot guns.
When we got to the station we saw lights burning in the building and figures moving about. We moved about the building for a few minutes until we discovered that there were five men inside. Then we made a noise to let the burglars know they were discovered. They did not blow out the lights, but gathered in a group and held a consultation at which they apparently decided to make a dash for liberty.

THEY OPENED FIRE.

"They came to the door of the waiting room and we stood about five feet from it and demanded their surrender. They answered by firing at us. We returned the fire and for about a minute the firing was general, some thirty shots being exchanged. When the burglars began to fire they rushed from the building and started, going in different directions. The cries of distress indicated that we hit three of them. One must have been severely wounded, judging from his tones. It was not Shannon, for he went in a different direction than that taken by the others.
We ran out of ammunition and decided to go over to Peckville to replenish it before starting on the trail of the burglars. On the porch of Watkins' drug store we found Shannon. We took him to Dr. Grover's office and had his wounds dressed and afterwards conveyed him to Olyphant in a carriage. At Olyphant we apprised Detective Crippen of what had happened and an engine was ordered from Carbondale to take the man to Scranton. On Shannon's person was found a revolver that he used in the affray and some trifles taken from the station. No money is left in the station at night and the burglars, even if undisturbed, would have secured little of value for their work."
The Peckville station was visited about a year ago and Agent Broad taken from the station in a carriage, as he was Tuesday night. He succeeded in winging one of the men who entered the place.

HUNTING FOR THE MEN.

The police department of the city was at work yesterday covering every point to catch the burglars who escaped. A report came from the station agent at Mill Creek that three trampish-looking fellows had boarded a train just above there house last night. A search of the train was made and one of the men was injured. Patrolmen Potter and McMullen were detailed to look these fellows up if they reached here.
They heard that three had gotten off at the South steel works, but upon going down there they discovered that it was a trap. The gang left the train. A fruitless search was made for them and the Taylor borough police were requested to keep a lookout for the gang.
A tramp was picked up at the Manville breaker last evening by Patrolman Duggan. At the Providence station house he was taken to all the doctors in this region yesterday, asking them to report immediately to Detective Martin Crippen any case of gunshot wound that might come to their notice.

CALLED AT DR. BERNSTEIN'S.

Dr. A. H. Bernstein, of Petersburg, sent word in response to this that he had an early morning call from a suspicious acting character who probably might be one of the burglars.
About 8 o'clock a trampish-looking fellow came to the door and asked to see the doctor. He was motioned to a seat in the office by the girl who answered the door bell and word was sent upstairs to the doctor. The latter was in bed at the time and it was ten or fifteen minutes before he came down.
When he entered his office he found that the visitor had departed. He was not seen to leave by any one in the house, but a neighbor of Dr. Bernstein stated later that he saw a rough looking man coming out of the office and that he came down from the porch one foot at a time, as if lame. He walked away slowly and as if in pain.

COMBINATION OF COAL COMPANIES

NEW YORK VIEW OF SIGNIFICANCE OF MOVEMENT.

Evening Post States That Negotiations Are Known to Be in Progress with Operators in Other Districts—Story Sent Out from New York About the Monster Coal Syndicate Formed by Men Interested in the Great Coal Carrying Roads.

The merging of local coal mining companies under a common head to be known as the Temple Iron company drew forth the following from the New York Evening Post last night:
"The union of the Scranton coal companies is believed to have been effected through deposit of their stock with the Guaranty Trust company of this city. The purchase of these companies is part of a comprehensive plan for control of the anthracite output, and while it is said that no more independent colliers are at present the subject of negotiations, yet it is to be taken as assured that the Scranton mines were first taken under control because of the dangerous proportions which the proposed independent anthracite line had assumed, and that others will be taken in if the projectors of the plan for uniting the anthracite output see any endangering of their plans for maintaining prices on a profitable basis.
"Negotiations are known to be in progress with operators in other districts. The much improved demand for anthracite and the advance in the prices makes it possible for coal roads which own a large proportion of their colliers to get the benefit of the improved situation. If independent operation could come in and cut prices of the stockholders would be compelled to meet the cut and then there would be no profit for anybody in the industry."

BUFFALO DIVISION INSPECTED.

President Truesdale and Party in Binghamton.
President W. H. Truesdale, General Manager W. F. Hallstead and Chief Engineer James Archibald, of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad company, who are making a tour of inspection over the company's lines, arrived last night in Binghamton, after having made the trip over the Buffalo division.
Today and tomorrow will be taken up with an inspection of the Syracuse and Utica divisions, and on the following day the party will be in Scranton. This, at least, was the programme yesterday.

MOIGAN'S VISIT.

The visit of J. P. Morgan to England has been taken as having bearing on the coal deal. It was stated today by those in a position to know that Mr. Morgan's visit had no relation to any such move nor is his return to be made the occasion for any definite announcement of a coal combination. This is not what he and the anthracite presidents wish to avoid.
"The presidents are notoriously timid about bringing on legislative attacks, and while the members of many industrial pools meet regularly in this city the coal presidents always deny that they ever meet formally. It is nevertheless a fact that the anthracite interests are now striving to regulate the output and make the industry fairly profitable."
Following is part of a story sent out from New York Tuesday night with reference to a monster coal combination.
"The return of J. Pierpont Morgan from London on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse today closed another triumphant chapter in this financier's career. He went abroad two months ago to secure the assent of the Reading and English stockholders to a gigantic scheme that the Vanderbilt of the Pennsylvania Railroad company, the New Jersey Central and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western companies, had formulated. This is nothing less than a consolidation of all the great Eastern coal interests under one management."
"The Reading's vast network of coal properties was such an important factor in the plan that the genius of Mr. Morgan was almost exclusively devoted to bringing the Reading Coal and Iron company into line.

GOVEN'S CONSOLIDATION.

"When Franklin B. Gowen in 1888 consolidated the railroad and the coal companies and blanketed them with one mortgage he rendered very difficult any future separation of the two interests. Assured of the support of the Vanderbilt influence in the various coal roads they largely control, Mr. Morgan was in a position to argue vigorously with the largest English shareholders, and, by sturdy, persistent efforts, he brought them to his way of thinking.
"The cause of this gigantic combination is due to the recent rate cutting, for which Edward R. Holden, coal manager of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad, is chiefly responsible.
"J. Pierpont Morgan's visit abroad was not generally supposed until today to be concerned with anything affecting the coal interests, outside Reading and its leased New Jersey Central mines and rolling stock. When the full magnitude of the consolidation was realized Wall street had a genuine sensation.
"Primarily it is estimated that fully $2,500,000 will be saved annually in operating expenses, and the profits increased fully as much more by doing away with all middle men, like Holden, of the Lackawanna, and sales agents of the other railroad lines.
"The Virginia companies are not in the pool because they are not wanted, and have no facilities for getting their coal into competition with that of the alleged eastern interests.

"The anthracite companies regard themselves as masters of the coal situation."

COMPANIES INTERESTED.

"The companies already in the gigantic trust are: The Reading company, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, Pennsylvania Railroad company, New York, Lake Erie and Western Coal and Iron company, Pennsylvania Coal company, New York, Ontario and Western, Central Railroad of New Jersey, New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad company, Schuylkill and Susquehanna, a branch road in Northeastern Pennsylvania.
"When the combined capital of this trust, $89,108,750, is considered, it is not surprising that Wall street shivered as if with an attack of ague."
