The Shirt Waist Season Is Here.

Again and, as usual, we're ready to meet it with a matchless line of the season's best productions.

Yes, Waists Are Different This Year

Very much different, but full of common sense ideas, backed by a dressiness that was entirely wanting last year. Even thrift wasn't lost sight of when the up-to-date waist was planned, for all of them will wash and launder up again to look as good as new.

Cambrics, Ginghams, Piques and Corded Batistes

Are the most popular waist weaves in vogue, white stripes of all sorts running in every direction that fancy seems to suggest are first favorites as to style. Of course, plain shades are much in demand also, in such colors as Cadet, China and Royal Blue, shades varying from Pale Lavender to Deep Purple Pinks, Pale Greens, Salmons and New Brown Tints are also shown.

As to Making And Fashion's Designs

We may say that every Shirt Waist leaving the Globe Warehouse is as properly made as perfect workmanship can make it. As to designs-sleeves, yokes and body modeling, are cut to fashion's latest demands. The sleeves are clear cut, but easy enough to be comfortable, while the deep pointed yokes, with diagonal cords and tucks, lend smartness to the effect Hill. UNHORSED BY A METEOR.

Midnight Advenure in Kentucky With a Bedeviled Fire Ball. From the Louisville Courier-Journal.

A huge meteor passed over the western portion of Garrard county about 12 o'clock Wednesday night, alarming nearly every one who saw it. It came out of the southern heavens, rushing northward at high speed, and exploded among the cliffs of the Kentucky river with a noise like the discharge of a cannon. It was apparently about the size of the full moon. Its path was wild and erratic and unusually close to the earth. It seemed literally to bore its way through the air, moving in a spiral, twisting fashion, alternately dipping toward the earth and rising from it, and all the while emitting sparks and sinister hissing sounds as it sped furiously onward. For a minute all that region was brilliantly illuminated.

Several persons in Bryantsville, seeing a sudden bright glare in their rooms, ran out to ascertain the cause of it, but were puzzled still further at finding no explanation, as the light had quickly disappeared. Henry Burdett of that village, who was fox hunting in "Polly's Bend," and who saw the meteor coming toward him, lashed Miss Kate Moran, of West Market his horse into a gallop to get out of its way. But he unfortunately headed in the wrong direction. A moment had scarcely elapsed before it passed with a swish and a roar, a short distance above his head, causing his horse to plunge so violently that he was thrown headlong from the saddle. He escaped serious injury by falling into a thick patch of broomsedge. Before he had regained his feet and while still temporarily blind from the intense light an explosion reverberated like thunder among the neighboring cliffs. Burdeth says he distinctly felt the heat of the fire ball as it passed over bis head. He also heard it sizzle. He didn't recover his horse until some time next day. Only an instant before Burdett's mishap, but at a point some six miles further south, sparks from the ball ignited a huge strawrick on the crest of Hackley's Hill, and t was quickly reduced to ashes. Millard Rout and Dick Moore, residents of Marksburg, who were on their way home from a 'possum hunt, saw the phenomenon and were consider ably frightened by it. They describe it as a sort of gyrating, globular missile of intense brilliancy, which rushed uncertainly across the country in a northerly direction, leaving the coun ry in a sinuous train. They heard a distant detonation. Among others in that vicinity who saw it was an old colored man, who galloped excitedly down the Lexington pike on a mule, shouting at the top of his voice that the judgment day had come. These cries aroused Pat O'Connor from deep sleep, causing him hurriedly to thrust his head out of a window and scan earth and sky for some moments with apprehensive looks. Seeing nothing e concluded that the negro was either drunk or demented, "The howlin' black ape," he exclaimed, pulling down the window and again retiring, "who ive:

heard of judgment day coming in the middle of the night." Reports indicate that the meteor first became visible somewhere near the Tennessee line, as it was seen by per sons as far south as Jellico and Corbin, near which place it passed at a much higher attitude than was after ward shown at any point in its erratic course. The path of such a phenomen on is rarely so near to the surface of the earth as this one seems to have been, nor is it often so erratic. It is probable that one or more meteoric rocks were liberated at the time of the explosion, but none has yet been found although several parties have been searching for them in a certain locality near the river on the northern border of the county.
