ABOUT AMBER.

Interesting Facts Concerning This Beautiful and Precious Material.

rom Harper's Bazaar.

Although amber is not a precious ione, or anything of the sort, it is, nevertheless, a precious material, one full of picturesque interest and very beautiful to boot. Most of the amber of the world has been found thrown up on the shores of the Baltic sea, and is supposed to be the residium of an old and huge forest of a period before the civilization of the world began. A little is found in this country, a little in England, a little in the far orient; a tittle of it is mined. and there the fossil trees, whose gum it was, are still in evidence in the strata with the gum exuding from them; but the most of the world's amber comes from the Prussian coast. Originally the appropriation of any piece of amber found along the shore was punished with death. At present the region is let out to contractors, and the coast is patrolled for trespassers. Quantitles of the precious substance are thrown on the beach after great storms, and in winter the amber fishers break through the ice and gather it by hauling up the sea weed into which it has become imbedded, or go out into deep water and spear up the masses of sea weed that carry it

The great entrepot or the sale of ambor is in Vienna, where it is out and carved into faceted beads and fanciful shapes. This is very delicate york, owing to the brittle nature of sect is found scaled into the gum, the Merchant tailor Joseph Aibrecht, of chief interest of which is that it is an extinct insect of a long vanished past When any modern insect is found in what purports to be ambor, it is known not to be amber, but merely gumcopal. Amber can be told from copal by the fact that the flame of burning copal is steady, while that of ambesnaps and sparkles. It is distinguished from its imitation in glass by bling it the glass resisting the teeth stoutly the amber seeming to yield to the bite True amber, moreover, is electrical: indeed, electricity takes its name from the old Greek name for amber, and none of its imitations has any power of that nature. The best amber wil attract to itself various articles with great celerity; if warmed by rubbing, the second quality will attract with much less force; and with every less fineness of grade, resulting usually from melting and remeiting, the power diminishes, till after the fourth quality has been reached there is no electrical power left at all.

When the pest amber is carved th morsels left from the carving are melted, molded and then recut, and the result is considered of the second quality. This process can be repeated four der United American Mechanics, will or five times, but each time the grade is of less value than that of the time

> The great purchasers of amber are imong the Mohammedans; and wonderful specimens are to be found in the Turkish markets. The women a very fond of it, both for its color and its fragrance, to illumine their toilets and the men use it for monthpieces to their pipes; as the friendly pipe is passed from mouth to mouth, and wip ing it would be a great solecism, it made of amber, which is supposed b the Turks to resist infection. We will see mothers even in this enlightened country who secure a string of ambebends around their child's throat with a no wiser purpose and belief.

While this brilliant and beautiful substance has no power of separating and refracting rays of light as a crystal has, it has the power of holding the rays in itself till it looks like solidines There is a soft radiance like that of vellow harvest moons, in the cloudy and milky amber-the mos valuable sort; and both that and the kind of a clear golden transparence is beautiful enough for queens to wear and kings to give their favorites; no wonder that it has again become attractive to the butterflies of fashion, who may tire of their pretty playthings, but will always return to them in due time, as a child returns with new joy to a long forgotten toy.
