Apparel of a Man Found on Sugar Loaf Mountain.

A story reached this city last evening of a peculiar find made recently by a man named Foster on Sugar Loaf Mountain. Mr. Foster went to the most unfrequented section of the mountain—about three miles from now—where, as he expressed it—to dig for gemstones, an article of export which is very valuable.

While scouring in the depths of the forest he came upon a new "trip" which contained a coat, shirt, pair of spectacles and a diary. A pair of trousers he also found nearby which had been badly chewed by some animal. He returned to his home at Burnwood and with some friends set about reading the diary which was rather illegibly written. What they were able to make out indicate that the writer was demented and it was discovered that a leaf had been torn out which was supposed to have borne a name. Mr. Foster returned to the spot on the mountain and found the leaf bearing the name of a man whose address was in New York state. The name could not be learned last night.

The people of Burnwood entertain the belief that human remains will yet be found on the Sugar Loaf.
