810,000 A YEAR.

That is a pretty large sum to pay for wetting the grass, yet Hon. E. E. Hendrick says that is what it would cost him to sprinkle his Lincoln avenue lawn and garden according to the new water rate. Mr. Hendrick is one of the most vigorous advocates against the new corporation and is sinking two artesian wells on his Dundaff street property in the hope of becoming independent of the octopus. He was quoted yesterday's Leader as saying: "It certainly looks as though the Consolidated Water company will be able to pay the interest on their million dollars of bonds and have something handsome left for the stock if they can sell all the water they can get at the rates your paper named yesterday. I figure that my lawn and garden would cost me about ten thousand dollars per year at thirty dollars per one thousand square feet."

JERMYN AND MAYFIELD.

The Windsor hotel, of which George Edmunds is proprietor, was entered by burglars some time during Wednesday night. The discovery was made yesterday morning by the proprietor, who, upon entering the bar found the money drawer open and the five dollars in change left there the previous night gone. Closer inspection of the premises showed that entrance had been effected by using an iron bar on one of the windows facing Bushbrook street and the open window at the rear facing the bar was evidently the way the intruder departed. Suspicion fell upon a young man who until recently was employed around the place and the matter was placed in the hands of Chief McGuire who arrested him at Scull Pond. He was brought here and placed in the lockup but as there was no direct evidence to prove he was the burglar, he was later in the day liberated.

Joe Collins, a lad employed at the Delaware and Hudson breaker, while attempting to close one of the breaker windows during yesterday afternoon's heavy shower, in some manner missed his footing and fell a distance of seven or eight feet. He was stunned by the fall and remained unable to move. Fortunately Outside Foreman Hunter was in the breaker at the time and saw the boy just as he struck the slate pickers upon which he fell. He, with the assistance of some water brought the boy around in a few minutes. After resting a while he was able, with assistance, to walk home. Fortunately his injuries consisted of but a few bruises, although he was of course, badly shaken up. It is thought he will be able to resume work in a couple of days.

TUNKHANNOCK.

Upon the reorganization of the National Guard the Eleventh regiment, to which one local company was assigned, went out of existence, some of the companies being disbanded, some being assigned to the Ninth regiment and some kept as separate companies.

Our Company K was one of the latter and Captain Reynolds, contented himself with making application to be assigned to the Thirteenth regiment, with headquarters at Scranton. The following clipping from this week's issue of the New Age would seem to show that the effort had been successful.

"News has been received at Scranton from the state department to the effect that the Thirteenth regiment will be perpetuated. The new Thirteenth will be composed of Companies A, B, C, D and H of the old regiment and Companies K and G of the Eleventh in Scranton, with Company G, of the old Thirteenth, at Montrose, Company L, of the Eleventh, at Honolule, Company E, of the Eleventh, at Easton, and Company K, formerly of the Seventh, now detached, of Tunkhannock."

Denizens Cannot Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be taken out of this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; and this can be done by using our nine cases out of ten are cured by our cathartic, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Only Jones.

The officers of her majesty's Twenty-fourth and Eighty-fourth infantry were sitting around their mess table in Castle Rock, the capital of the Island of Man, one evening more than thirty years ago—that is, all of them except one; but then that was only Jones.

Nobody minded Jones; even his peculiarities had begun to be an old subject for chaffing, and he had had such small attention to their chaffing that they had come to find it little pleasure, and after some weeks of discomfit Lieutenant Jones had been allowed to choose his own pleasures without much interference.

These were not extravagant. A favorite book, a long walk in all kinds of weather and a sail when the weather was favorable. He would not drink—he said it hurt his conscience, and he did not care to flirt or visit the belles of the capital—he said it hurt his affections. Once Captain De Reuzy indignantly wondered whether it was possible to "hurt his honor," and Jones calmly answered that "it was not possible for Captain De Reuzy to do so."

These gentlemen's ideas of proper behavior, but for some reason or other no one brought him to account for it. It was easier to shrug their shoulders and call him "queer," or say "It's only Jones," or even quietly to assert his superiority.

One evening Colonel Underwood was discussing a hunting party for the next day. Jones walked into the room and was immediately accosted: "Something new, lieutenant. I find there are plenty of deer on the island, and we mean to give you a run tomorrow. I have heard you are a good rider; will you join us?"

"You must excuse me, colonel; such a thing is neither in the way of duty nor my pleasure."

"You forget the honor the colonel does you," said young Ensign Powell. "I thank the colonel for his courtesy, but I can see no good reason for accepting it. I am sure my horse will not approve of it, and I am sure the hunt will not like it, and I am not a good rider. Therefore, I should not enjoy it."

"You need not be afraid," said the colonel, rather sneeringly; "the country is quite open, and these low Manx we shall ride over at any rate."

"Excuse me, colonel, I am afraid. If I should be hurt it would cause my mother and sisters very great alarm and anxiety. I am very much afraid of doing this."

Nothing could be done with a man so obstinately contented with his lot, who had boldly turned away, half contemptuously, and Ensign Powell took Jones' place.

The morning proved to be a very bad one, with the prospect of a rising fog. The party gathered in the barrack yard Jones said earnestly to his colonel:

"I am afraid, sir, you will meet with a severe storm."

"I think so, lieutenant, but we proposed to dine at Gwynne-hall, and we shall get that far at any rate."

So they rode rather gloomily away in the rain. Jones attended to the military duties assigned him, and then, about noon, walked seaward. It was hard work by this time to keep his footing on the narrow quay, but amid the blinding spray and mist he saw quite a crowd of men going rapidly toward the great, shivering scarlet rocks, a mile beyond the town. He stopped an old sailor and asked:

"Is anything wrong?"

"A little steamer, sir, off the Calf of Man. She is driving this way, and indeed I fear she will be taken rocks afore tonight."

Jones stood still a moment and then followed the crowd as fast as his feet would let him. When he joined them they were gathered on the summit of a huge cliff, watching the doomed craft. She was now within sight, and it was evident that her seamen had almost lost all control of her. She was being flung by the waves upon the rocks, and the captain, who she was driving, in the hulls of the wind not only the booming of the muffled guns but also the shouts of the imperiled crew could be heard.

"What can be done?" said Jones to an old man whose face betrayed the strongest emotion.

"Nothing, sir, I am afraid. If she'd managed to rount to rocks, she would have gone to pieces on a sand, and there are plenty of men who would have risked life to save life. 'But how are we to reach them from this height?"

"How far are we above water?"

"This rock goes down like a wall forty fathoms, sir."

"What depth of water at the foot?"

"Forty feet or more."

THE EGYPTIAN AT HOME.

In Hospitality and Politeness He Stands Pre-eminent. From Pearson's Weekly.

The Egyptian of today may easily be surprised in honesty, courage and the manly virtues; yet in hospitality and politeness he stands pre-eminent. No Egyptian sits down to a meal without asking his passerby to partake of it; during his thirty days' fast every year his doors are open to all, no introduction is needed; to the poor he gives ungrudgingly.

Though allowed to have four wives, the Eftendi is almost always a monogamist. Marrying early, he is, as a rule, a good husband and father, and fond of and kind to his children.

To show the direction in which the ideas of marriage are setting, we may say that one of the first teachers in the Mohammedan law in Egypt some time ago laid down this maxim, that the prophet has allowed four wives to any man who would engage to love all four alike, but as he had never met any one capable of doing so, he would recommend one wife as the interpretation of the prophet's words. Indeed, the relations of the wife so resent a man's marrying again that it is hardly ever done.

In abstinance from drinking to excess the whole Egyptian nation stands a head and shoulders above the rest. The hospitality of the sheikhs, or village headmen, is boundless, and takes the shape of feasts at which Athelstane might have presided and Cedric been entertained, and both found themselves at home.

We have seen men sit down to a banquet of twenty-one heavy courses, where a huge turkey was the seventeenth course; and the first course alone consisted of a whole sheep, inside which was a goose, inside that a chicken, and a pigeon, and finally an egg, which last was presented to the principal guest, as containing the essence of all.

The weakest point of the Egyptian's armor is his lack of courage, and very feeble idea of what fair play means. An Egyptian Eftendi, or man of the upper classes, would be presented to the fact of a duel of one of his countrymen had with an Italian, in which the Egyptian chose clubs as the weapon to fight with, and then disabled the right hand of the Italian by a sudden blow from the club he had begun. He actually could see nothing to blameworthy in his countryman, but rather commended his promptness in action.

On the other hand, recent events in the Sudan have shown that the Egyptian makes a good fighting man, provided he has had the proper training, and is not called upon to act for himself. He cannot take the initiative.
