Another year has come and gone,

A year that's fraught with changes,

May it, be a day of joy; May your after thought be, oh so sweet,

O'er our hills, with verdure crowned;

But the dearest spot on earth to you, Is the old, old burying ground.

There sleep today in dreamless sleep, Your parents of long ago; Ne er mindful of the chilling blast,

And flecked with many a tear,

Not mixed with Earth's alloy.

Cushaded smiles the summer sun

As the seasons come and go.

During hours of retrospection,

On this lapse of changing years; Many times the lip will quiver,

And the evelids fill with tears,

Since your fathers settled here; You have seen the bridal party,

You have seen the silent bier.

Surely time will leave its footprints,

We are growing, steadily old; And in truth we hear the adage, "Silver threads among the gold."
