Work Was Commenced Yesterday to the Great Satisfaction of the Members of the Company—John Gault Re-Arrested and Sent to the County Jail for Thirty Days—Also Held in $300 Bail—Mr. and Mrs. Epps Entertain—Personal Notes.

There was joy in abundance at the rooms of the Century Hose company, when the members assembled for their usual social chat last night. The cause of this happiness was that work was commenced yesterday on the alterations to be made at the hose house.

Among the Neptune and Century companies there is a spirited but friendly rivalry as to which reaches the honor of the first in the Eleventh and Nineteenth wards first. Under the present conditions the Century cannot be expected to compete with the Neptune boys.

Mrs. C. Hartman, owner of the Century quarters, is about to remodel the building to suit the requirements. The first floor, now used as meeting and sleeping rooms, will be improved. The front windows will be removed and a swinging door put in. An extension will be added, in which house the horses and apparatus will be kept. The floor above will be fitted up for a parlor, meeting room and sleeping apartment. When these changes are made the company will be in good shape.

PRESIDENT AND OLD FRIENDS.

He Addresses Seven Thousand People at East Liverpool. East Liverpool, O., Aug. 29--Six years ago tonight, William McKinley, then governor, opened his campaign for a second term from Calumet, John Taylor's porch and the fact was recalled when Congressman Taylor, who now represents the old McKinley district in congress, spoke from the same porch this evening, welcoming the president back to the old Eighteenth century. Seven thousand people thronged the grounds and streets about the Taylor homestead.

In response, the president said: "As I voice appreciation of this reception I can't help recalling that from this year place year in and year out I have met this people and they always gave me the same generous greeting. You have always been firm in your friendship for me, and though I have been absent for more than four years, that regard I feel for you, has never abated."

Mr. McKinley came out on the porch for a minute to bow to the crowd and was given an ovation. The demonstration continued for an hour. Aside from tonight's reception, the president and his wife spent a quiet day going out once or twice. Tomorrow morning at 10:30 the party leaves for Canton.

THE SLAVES OF TEA.

Enormous Quantities of the Beverage Consumed by Russians. A campaign has been begun in Russia against tea drunkenness. It may not perhaps be generally known that the average Russian drinks enormous quantities of tea. This is particularly true of the poor classes, says the New York Times. The Russian workingmen uses the so-called "brick" tea, which is the cheapest sort, being mixed with the stems and compressed by some adhesive gum into dry cakes of various sizes, resembling in its appearance plus tobacco. This tea, which would prove poisonous to any one else, is consumed by the Russian workingman at the average rate of about twenty stakans (or tumblers) a day. The Russian "stakans" being quite equal to about five of the little tumblers of cups used in the United States at "afternoon" teas.

In fact, a Russian is not satisfied until "sedmol pot proshebyot," or "the seventh perspiration breaks out," according to the popular saying. If it be taken into consideration that black, sour, or bitter brick-like bread, raw onions, garlic, dried, brick-like fish and strongly salted herrings are usually the chief articles of food of the people at large one must not wonder at the enormous quantity of hot tea needed to quench a Russian's thirst and help on his digestion. "This excessive tea drinking not only ruins the digestion in time, but by the 'tea intoxication' which it brings on is rapidly producing a physical and moral degeneration of the Russian masses."

While the tea which is habitually taken by the poor moujik is a vile concoction, the beverage as prepared for the leisure classes is superior to English or French tea. The Russian method of preparing it goes a long way to contribute to the fine taste of the beverage. In this process the famous "samovar" plays the principal part. The "samovar" is the utmost made of copper or brass used only for boiling the water. In the middle there is a kind of chimney or fire vent, around which fresh cold water is poured into the "samovar."

Burning charcoal or wood is thrown into the chimney, and it usually takes about a quarter of an hour before the water begins to boil, this being announced by a volume of steam from under the cover. Then the boiling water is poured upon the tea in the pot, and the latter placed on the top of the "samovar" to keep it warm, as tea cools are unknown in Russia.

The infusion is made strong, but only about a fifth of a quarter of a glass is filled with it, the rest being filled up with boiling water. A slice of lemon or milk is added, according
