The boring for water at the silk mill has resulted not only in a copious flow of aqua but in a considerable outpouring of natural gas. The quantity is not yet large enough to be of any particular service but those in charge are hopeful that enough may be secured for fuel and light for the mill.

THEATRICAL.

"Phroso" at the Lyceum. Scranton has much to thank Charles Frohman for, but nothing to which he has treated us calls for deeper gratitude than the finished production of 'Phroso" witnessed at the Lyceum last night by one of the largest and most fashionable audiences of the

An all-star cast might be applied in characterizing the company, for every one of the parts of any importance was in the hands of either a star or an actor of ability entitling him or her to a stellar position.

In the title role was no less an artist than Odette Tyler and when it is said the character gives her every opportunity for the display of her cleverness and versatility a fair idea of her part may be gleaned. It ranges from ingenue to heroics and Miss Tyler sucreeds in carrying out the role without permitting of even the sembiance of a harsh contract.

Robert D. McLean's portrayal of the haracter of Lord Wheatley and the 'Mouraki Pasha" of J. H. Benrimo, one of the most popular members of the Empire Stock company, were of the finished kind of acting that goes beyond criticism. Franklin Roberts as 'Constantine" combined most admirably the physical and artistic qualities demanded by the exacting part and his work deserves to rank with that of the leading trio.

Other members of the cast whose work in minor parts was meritorious were Morgan Coman as "Denny;" Ogden Wright as "Watkins;" Lawrence Eddinger as "Hogyardt," and Maud Hasford as "Ellena." At the end of the third act there was a triple encore. Miss Tyler, Mr. McLean and Mr. Benrimo were kept bowing acknowledgments until it cemed there wasn't a bow left in them. No small part of this was meant for Edward Rose and H. V. Esmond, whose dramatization of Hope's novel is a superior work.

The Bennett and Moulton company will close its engagement at the Academy of Music today by presenting "The Senator's Wife" in the afternoon and "The Girl of the Mines" in the

"Under the Red Robe."

If you have read Rostand's "Cyrano le Bergerac," the play which has made such a sensation and Stanley Weyman's story, "Under the Red Robe," you will recognize at once that Mr. Rostand's piece here is simply Mr. Weyman's Gil de Berault plus the big nose. Both men are expert swordsmen and fearless duellists. Both are victims of Cupid's snares and into the life of each comes a great and thrilling sacrifice-a sacrifice for love. But when the two men are compared there are many points overwhelmingly in Gil de Berault's favor. He is not the noisy brawler that Cyrano is, and he is much more of a hero. "Under the Red Robe" made a great sensation when Charles Frohman produced it at the Empire theatre a few years ago. Its American triumph has continued ever since, and the presentation of it which is promised by Julius Cahn's company at the Lyceum this afternoon and evening will be the same in every respect that was seen in the metropo lis. Mr. Cahn's leading man is Paul Cazeneuve, a great favorite, who will ault. His leading lady is Miss Amell Gardner, who is clever and handsome and who will enact the part of Rence de Cocheforet.

The Play's the Thing. This familiar quotation has apparently received serious consideration by the management of the King Dramatic company, which is to apear at the Academy of Music next week. Wher a repertoire company announces such a startling line of plays as "Hands Across the Sea," "Faust," "Power of the Press," "Cumberland, '61," "Cotton King." Hoyt's "A Tin Soldier" and "The White Rat," it would seem as if more than ordinary attention were given to the drawing powers of each production. The King company has carefully chosen its repertoire from the most famous productions in recent years. The company is strong and capable and fully competent to handle the plays in keeping with their merits and gorgeous surroundings. "Hands Across the Sea" will be the opening bill Monday evening, while "Faust" is announced for the first of the dime matinees.

"The Winters Tale."

The engagement on Monday evening next, at the Lyceum of the great star triumvirate, Louis James-Katheve Kidder-Charles B. Hanford and their brilliant coterie of associates, brings forcibly to mind that the field of the Shakesperezu or legitimate drama, as represented by actors of the older school is narrowed down to this one excellent organization. In Louis James Kathryn Kidder, Charles B. Hanford and the many other distinguished names in the organization, they have drawn together practically all that remains of the legitimate actors of distinction on the American stage. They have selected a repertoire of eight plays embodying the best in the Shakesperean and classic drama. "The Winters Tale" has been selected for presentation here. It will be a mamnoth production and bring out the full strength of the three stars and supporting company.

At the Gaiety.

The Little Egypt Burlesque company vill close its engagement at the Galety with the performance of this afternoon and tonight. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Miner and Vans' Bohemon Burlesquers will be the attraction. The company gives a fine performance.
