

CLAIM YOUNG QUINN KILLED HIS FATHER

DEATH DUE TO A MISDIRECTED BLOW, DEFENSE SAYS.

Commonwealth Concludes Its Testimony in the Carbondale Township Murder Case and Mr. Kelly Outlines the Story of the Affair Which the Defense Proposes to Prove. Widow, Son and Daughter-in-Law of the Victim Give Their Versions. Sunday Saloons Responsible.

Sunday beer selling was encountered at every turn of the proceedings in the Carbondale township murder case as it was developed before Judge Gordon and a jury in court room No. 2 yesterday. Young Tom Gallagher was drinking in a saloon in Carbondale after coming from church. On his way home he met a crowd of young men strolling on the steps of the township school house, drinking from a half-gallon can of beer and a half-pint bottle of whiskey. Young Quinn was in the crowd and both he and Gallagher drank their full share of this half-gallon and half-pint and another half-gallon and half-pint which Gallagher helped pay for. Gallagher was on his way back from Mrs. McHale's saloon, where he went to get a glass of beer after dinner, when he came up with Quinn, who had gone to the same place for a pair of beer. They had fought at the school house in the morning and a renewal of the fight in the afternoon brought on the killing.

All the testimony for the prosecution was presented at 2.30 o'clock and the defense was examining its second witness at adjourning time.

The theory of the prosecution as outlined yesterday by Assistant District Attorney Thomas, was described in detail by Mrs. Nellie Quinn and her husband, James Quinn, Jr., and corroborated in various features by several less important witnesses. It was in effect that Tom and Joe Gallagher followed young Quinn, who was returning from McHale's with a pair of beer, and assaulted him; that Mrs. Dempsey and Mrs. Gallagher came to the assistance of the Gallagher boys; that old man Quinn ran over from the railroad track to save his son; that he was felled by a blow from a stone on the side of the head, delivered by Thomas Gallagher, and another on the forehead, delivered by Joseph Gallagher, and that Mrs. Dempsey and Mrs. Gallagher also struck old man Quinn previous to his receiving the fatal blow on the side of the head.

DEFENDANTS' VERSION.

The defendants' version of the affair as given in Attorney Kelly's opening was altogether different to that told by the Quinns. Joe Gallagher was being held about the knees by young Quinn, while old man Quinn belabored him over the head with his cane. Mrs. Gallagher rescued her boy and told him to run for his life. He did, and was heading down the railroad track, pursued by the Quinns, when old man Quinn was felled by a stone which his son, who brought up the rear, threw at the fleeing Gallagher.

Mrs. Nellie Quinn was the first witness called by the commonwealth. She told that her husband, James Quinn, Jr., went down to McHale's to get a pair of beer for Thomas Cummings, who was working a Sunday shift on the gravity tracks, opposite their home. The witness happened by the Gallagher house and heard Tom Gallagher, his mother and grandmother talking together and Tom Gallagher was heard to say: "The bald-headed— I'll follow him. I owe him a grudge and I'll get it out of him."

The witness then started to McHale's to bring her husband home. Tom Gallagher started in the same direction, but had gone some distance when his mother called him back and gave him some bright shining article which he put in his hip pocket. Gallagher then hurried on to the hotel, reaching it before Mrs. Quinn, but not until after Mr. Quinn had departed.

Tom Gallagher saw the witness outside of McHale's and began to abuse her and to make threats to blow her brains out. Joseph Gallagher appeared about this time and joined with his brother in calling her names. He also remarked to the witness that it would be a sorry day for her.

GALLAGHER STARTED FOR HIM.

The witness' husband had left McHale's and gone across the commons to a clump of trees, where he and Cummings were engaged in drinking the pair of beer when the others went down the road to McHale's. When he came from behind the trees and took to the road Joe Gallagher saw him and shouted to his younger brother, "There goes the bald-headed— I'll catch him," at the same time starting up the hill, followed by Tom Gallagher. The witness thought to pass them and reach her husband, but Tom Gallagher threatened to kill her if she followed and in her fear she remained standing. She heard the exchange between her husband and Joe Gallagher and saw the latter fell her husband with a blow. They were all beating Quinn when old man Quinn ran over and besought them not to kill his boy. Mrs. Gallagher said something to her sons and they turned upon old man Quinn. Thomas Gallagher struck him on the side of the head with a stone, and as he was tottering Joseph Gallagher hit him with another stone on the forehead. When he was done Joe Gallagher kicked him. The witness approached the scene of the fight, but was kept from participating in it by Tom Gallagher's threats to blow her heart out.

Thomas Cummings was the second witness. He said he saw the belligerents bunched together and could not tell who threw the stone that struck the old man. He was working on the railroad when the fighting was on.

In answer to a question by Judge Gordon the witness said that the two Quinns were about thirty feet apart when the old man received the blow. He did not see Mrs. James Quinn, Jr. anywhere in the vicinity of the fighting, he said. Neither did he see old man Quinn using his cane on the Gallagher's.

Min James Quinn, widow of the victim, next testified that she saw Tom Gallagher follow her son down towards McHale's. At Sweeney's he stopped to pick up a stone. "My husband," she went on to say, "was on the porch. He went away and later I saw him talking with John McDonald from a lot which we own, and which is close to the Gravity road. I saw my son coming up the road and I saw Joe Gallagher running after him and yelling. James did not pay any attention to him at first, but finally he turned and asked: 'Is it me you want?' Joe Gallagher said it was and my son asked: 'What do you want?' Gallagher said: 'There's trouble between me and you and it must be settled.' My son said: 'We will settle it, here and now,' and he took something out of his pocket and struck my son, saying: 'You scoundrel, take that.' My son fell. Mrs. Gallagher and Mrs. Dempsey were running up the railroad to the scene and threw stones at my son. He was getting up. I think he had regained his feet and they knocked him down again. My husband came across the railroad. He had a stone as if some one had spoken to him. Then I saw Thomas Gallagher strike him with a stone. He staggered, but before he fell Joe Gallagher hit him in the forehead."

On cross-examination Mrs. Quinn admitted that when her husband fell and she ran to his side she said to her case: 'James you are the cause of your father's death.' She denied that he retorted: 'Shut up, or I'll give you a thump in the mouth.' What he did say was: 'That Tom Gallagher killed him.' She testified that her husband was 69 years old.

MCDONALD'S TESTIMONY.

John McDonald, the man with whom the elder Quinn was talking before he ran over to the fight, was the next witness. He did not see the fatal blow struck. He saw Mrs. Gallagher hit old man Quinn and he saw the latter hit Joe Gallagher with his cane. He could not tell, though, who threw the stone with which old man Quinn was felled.

Martin Battle and Thomas Carden, who witnessed the affair from a distance of 300 feet, were also called, but did not throw any light on the case. They saw old man Quinn fall, but could not tell by whom the blow was struck. James Quinn, Jr., whom the defense charges with the death of his father, was next subjected to a lengthy examination. He first recounted the incident which took place in the morning, when he and Tom Gallagher got into a quarrel and which ended in his striking Gallagher and knocking him to the ground. Then he went on to tell of the incidents of the afternoon.

The first he saw of the Gallagher's was when he was starting home after coming from behind the tree, where he and Cummings went to drink beer. Both the Gallagher boys and their mother were at McHale's and when they saw him they came after him. Joe called after him several times and finally caught up with him. Joe referred to the trouble the two families were having and said "We'll settle it now." The witness answered that he wouldn't have anything to do with him that day. Cummings offered to interfere and Joe told him "keep away. This will be man against man."

WAS SHOVED AWAY.

Joe caught hold of Quinn and was shoved away. He caught hold of him again and was again pushed back. Quinn's attention was attracted by Tom Gallagher and his mother coming up and while his head was turned partially aside Joe Gallagher drew some instrument from his back pocket and hit him in the breast, sending him to the ground.

Then the three Gallagher's and Mrs. Dempsey assaulted him, the boys pounding and kicking him and the women pelting him with stones. This was going on for several minutes when Quinn's father came running over and begged of them not to kill his boy. The assailants turned their attention to the father, all of them pelting him with stones. Thomas Gallagher hit the old man on the side of the head with a big stone and as he was tottering Joe Gallagher hit him with another stone on the forehead. The witness got up and chased Tom Gallagher, but did not overtake him. When he returned the tumult had subsided and his father was being carried to the house.

On cross-examination he denied having seen his father use his cane on the Gallagher's and positively swore that he not only did not throw a stone at Joe Gallagher which struck his father, but that he did not throw or attempt to throw a stone during all the fight. He also denied that his mother said: "You are the cause of your father's death." What she did say, he averred, was that "You are the cause of the trouble that brought on your father's death." He admitted that he whipped Tom Gallagher at the school house in the morning and that he would have given him a worse beating if the crowd had not restrained him.

COMMONWEALTH RESTED.

With his testimony the commonwealth rested and Mr. Kelly opened for the defense. His version of the affair was, as told above, that young Quinn killed his father in attempting to strike Joe Gallagher.

Tom Gallagher came home to dinner under the influence of drink and with blood on his face and clothing. Mr. Kelly went on to say. His mother learned from him of the encounter at the school house and when he started out to go to McHale's in the afternoon Mrs. Gallagher feared he would get into more trouble and sent her mother to the store, where Joe Gallagher was working, to tell him that Joe was drinking and to have him go to McHale's and bring him home.

Mrs. Gallagher said that Quinn was down at McHale's and as this heightened her fear for her son, she herself went down. Mrs. Quinn was there and she heard her say to Tom: "You'll swallow your own blood before this day is over."

Mrs. Gallagher and Joe were taking the younger brother home and when they approached the crossing where Quinn and Cummings were standing, Cummings called out to Quinn: "There's your man."

Quinn turned to Joe Gallagher and said: "I licked your brother this morning and I can lick you, too." At this he struck out with his right hand at Joe, but missed him, and then swung the beer barrel at him. Joe then struck back and knocked him down. Quinn caught Joe by the knees and was trying to pull him down when old man Quinn appeared and commenced to pound Joe over the head with his cane.

STRUCK HIS FATHER.

Mrs. Gallagher jumped in to save her boy and succeeded in getting him away. Joe ran down the track with the old man in pursuit. Young Quinn followed the old man, a few feet behind. They had gone only a short distance when young Quinn hurled a stone at Joe Gallagher. It struck the old man, who was between them, and he fell to the ground with his skull crushed. In falling his head came in contact with a stone and cut his forehead.

Before proceeding with its testimony the defense recalled Mrs. James Quinn, sr., for further cross-examination. Mr. O'Brien asked her if she had at any time declared that her son caused her husband's death and that she didn't blame the Gallagher's for it. She answered positively in the negative. She also denied that she ever said it was Mrs. Dempsey who killed her husband.

Mrs. Tillie Cannon, an aunt of the Gallagher boys, was then placed on the stand and stated that on the afternoon of the killing the preceding witness said in her own house: "I don't blame them. I blame James Quinn and his wife," and that at another time she accused Mrs. Dempsey of having thrown the stone which caused the fatal wound.

Thomas Gallagher was on the stand at adjournment. His story, as far as he went, was directly in line with Mr. Kelly's opening.

The defense will call Mrs. Sweeney and several of her children who are neighbors and who, it is alleged, were also eye witnesses of the whole affair.

A DRAMATIC TREAT.

It Will Be Furnished at St. Luke's Parish House Tomorrow Night.

Mr. Willis E. Dudley, who was booked at St. Luke's Parish House in "Strange Adventures of a Kodak Fiend" on tomorrow night, has broken down in health and will be unable to appear. Fortunately for holders of course tickets, the committee of arrangements has been able to secure a first class and high-priced attraction to substitute. Miss Anna Deony Martin, of Boston, one of the great entertainers of the season, will present on that evening the picture drama based on Anthony Hope's great novel, "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Miss Martin is an artist who commands one-third higher terms than Mr. Dudley and her entertainment is complete with dramatic action and strong elocution. The press notices of her entertainments and the personal endorsements of prominent people warrant the committee in promising its patrons a treat equal to any entertainment in the course. There are a few good seats still on sale at Powell's at 15 cents each.

In arranging the course in the first place the committee considered the advisability of engaging Miss Martin and only refrained from doing so on account of the expense. Circumstances have compelled them to place Miss Martin in the course and the patrons thus get even a higher grade entertainment than they expected.

FUNERAL OF MRS. CHAS. HORN.

Remains Brought Here from Pittsburg and Interred in Forest Hill. The body of Mrs. Charles Horn, late of Pittsburg, was brought to this city yesterday on the Delaware and Hudson railroad and interred in Odd Fellows' plot, Forest Hill cemetery. Her husband, who was a brother of Attorney George Horn, of this city, was buried in Forest Hill cemetery about twenty-two years ago. The pall-bearers were John T. Howe, Chester Gardner, James McAnulty, Samuel Edgar, C. Comeyes and William G. Robertson.
