Immense Amount of Money Hidden Away in That Country.

From the Courrier des Etats-Unis. About fifty milliards of francs is said to be the total amount of the gold product of the two worlds since the discovery of America, And, strange to say, of this outpouring of gold which during four centuries has been scattered all over the world, an immense portion remains idle in India, where it has been embedded. In India the gold returns to the earth and remains there more completely hidden than it was in its original state,

The amount of gold brought into India during the past sixty years, that is to say, from 1837 to 1898, is greater three millions nine hundred and fortythree millions of francs than the amount exported. The soil of India absorbs the floods of gold just as the perity. sands of the desert swallow the overflow of the great rivers. When it is remembered that this work of absorption has been going on with little interruption for ten centuries, and still continues under our eyes, it is easy to form an idea of the immense treasures that are hidden in that country. All this gold remains sterile, and, consequently, is lost. It is absurd to say that it is brought into monetary circulation or that it passes through the hands of the native goldsmiths. It is disseminated in innumerable hiding places, from which it never emerges. In ancient times and up to the period of the conquest and occupation by the English, individual property was not protected. The country, from one end to the other, was the prey of rival factions, who ravaged it censelessly and without mercy. Princes and potentates is well as the small fry, were convered and shorn constantly. To escape from the general pubbory the natives, great and small, carefully conceated their noney and their values under ground. This inveterate habit became becoditary among them, so that today the intives do just what their accestors did in post ages. It is estimated that milliards upon milliards of francs in gold lie in the hiding places of India, and it is known that this colossal treasure is in coin that dates back several centuries.
