Rotomahana. As they approached the hot lakes, huge cracks, extending hundreds of yards in length and about a foot in width, were seen in all directions. The scene was one of strange grandeur of absolute desolation. The upheaval of nature had blown the wonderful terraces to atoms; steam was rising in dense clouds from one end of the gorge to the other, a distance of about nine miles. Rotomahana lake was a yawning cauldron from which rose a majestic column of steam. The ground was completely stripped of vegetation and covered with lava from the mountain. The lava was reduced to the consistency of flour, so that the explorers sank in it nearly to their knees. Thus in the space of time was North Island suddenly shorn of its most peculiar natural features. In six hours the whole aspect of the country was changed, and what was one of the most beautiful spots in the world was transformed into a barren country carpeted in lava and covered with debris. The geysers, however, still abound in profusion, and it is possible in time other terraces may be formed.

MONEY IN THE AIR.

Remarkable Result of a Tornado in the South Dakota Country. From the Chicago Inter-Ocean.

"I see that they've had another mud shower somewhere in 'Bismarck' and observed the man in the crash suit as he laid down the paper. 'Huh,' ejaculated the man who had just paid for the round, 'another one of those newspaper lies. Mud showers, red snow-storms, airships, kissing bugs; there's all the same, nothing but fakes, sir! Overwrought imagination of some country correspondent produced by a too steady diet of strong liquor and a high temperature. Mud shower! Huh!'

A NEW ZEALAND VESUVIUS.

The Whole Aspect of the Country Changed in Six Hours. From the Windsor Magazine.

The white terraces of Rotomahana rose up in a series of twenty platforms in the form of a gigantic stairway. Each terrace was perfectly horizontal and of dazzling whiteness. The top step was vertically eighty feet above the base and sat 300 feet back. From every platform bubbles copious clouds of steam. A stream of boiling water continually flowed from the geysers, and as it fell slowly from tier to tier the silicates with which the water was heavily charged became deposited, on its exposure to the air, in wonderful lace-work designs of infinite variety and of dazzling purity and whiteness were formed. Not far from the white terrace was another termed the "Pink Terrace," where, owing to some color-bearing substance in the silicious waters falling from the geysers, the deposits were of a delicate pink hue, from which was derived the name "Pink Terrace."

Unfortunately New Zealand no longer possesses this unique spectacle, for the terraces are no more. The various agencies of nature which originally built up such curious forms served in turn to destroy them. M. Falconer gives a graphic description of the event. He was residing at that time about forty miles distant from Tararua. In 1886, on June 10, the night was clear and calm. Heavy rumbling sounds like distant rolls of thunder filled the air, but there was no very great alarm. The next day dawned dull and gloomy. About 7.30 o'clock the morning grew darker and light grey ash, very fine, began to fall. He says that, although they surmised an eruption was taking place in the Hot Lake district, there was no definite tidings to that effect, so that he could only wait to see what would happen.

By the aid of a lantern he succeeded in groping his way to the telegraph office, and there he learned that a serious disturbance was taking place at Tararua and Rotomahana. About 11 o'clock the darkness lifted. All round the ground was covered with a thin, filmy veil of fine ash to the depth of half an inch, and it was afterward found that the intense darkness was caused by a thick cloud of dust blown from the volcano to a height so tremendous that it passed above Tauranga and dispersed over the country some miles away.

The manifestation was accompanied by intense cold, the thermometer registering five degrees of frost. This is explained by the fact that the columns of steam as they came hissing out of the craters expanded as they ascended and absorbed their own heat, which became latent, so that the heat was abstracted from everything near. A day or two later the government geologist arrived at Tauranga, and preparations to inspect the seat of the disaster were pushed forward rapidly. On the fourth day after the eruption, the party arrived at Wairoa, a Maori village. There was scarcely a vestige of the settlement to be seen, the whole village having been crushed beneath volcanic lava, and the charred and battered remains of the little village church and other buildings protruded above the surface of the deposit, which at first measured four feet in thickness, but afterward settled down to half that depth. One young Englishman who lived in the district and exacted tolls from visitors to the Hot Lakes. The scene was the wildest imaginable. The air rushed over the land with cyclonic fury, uprooting, tearing and breaking trees that had survived the hall of rocks, leaving here and there a gnarled and jagged trunk, denuded of branches and stripped of its bark. The next day the party set off for
