The plucky girl clung to a cake of ice until Will Parnes and several other gentlemen, who were about fifty rods from the scene, were attracted to the spot by the cries of the frightened child. Boards and planks were shoved out to her for her to grasp, but none were long enough to quite reach the girl. After elinging

TRICKS OF SHOPLIFTERS.

Ingenious Ways of Smart People to Get Things for Nothing.

I'rom Tit-Bits. There is no section of criminals that display such varied ingenuity as shoplifters,' said a clever detective, who has had a long experience of the fraternity; and I can assure you that many of them might give lessons in cunning to the most artful Chinee.

Shoplifting is a science that appeals largely to woman. Their sex, to a certain extent, disarms suspicion, especially when, as is usual, they are elegantly dressed, and do their shopping in a well appointed brougham. Their dress gives them unlimited scope for the concealment of small articles; and again, the game is so comparatively free from risk, for if they are caught red-handed, as a rule, it simply means an awkward interview with the proprietor and payment for the goods appropriated. You see, it does not pay a fashionable shopkeeper to give his house a bad reputation as a haunt of thieves; and, further, many of the lady-lifters are women with some standing in soclety, who are either kleptomaniacs or who cannot resist the sudden temptation or annexing a pretty thing without payment.

Ladies of this class are novices in the art, and are readily detected. A common practice with them is to slip any small article from the counter into their umbrellas when the assistant's back is turned. If detected, it is the simplest of accidents, and the culprit apologizes prettily and restores the article.

Another favorite place of conceal- M ment is in the loose folds of a blouse or "shirt," where anything small will J lie undected, while the more artful among them have cunningly devised pockets in their skirts, into which they can slip quite a large amount of plunder.

One lady, who had quite a long and successful career at counter-stealing. was always accompanied by a little girl, ostensibly her daughter, carrying a large doll. The mother, who was young and pretty, and faultlessly dressed, would hold the doll while sh was being served (a very natural and prudent act with a valuable doll. which the child might drop at any moment), and when the assistant's atten tion was withdrawn she would slip into the hollow interior of the doll any small article, from a bottle of scent to an article of jewelry, that might be lying near. Jewelers and chemists whose counters are crowded with portable articles of value are the chief victims of women of this class. The periodical sales of large drapers naturally afford good opportunities for women thieves-many of them, I am sorry to say, women of social position. In the inevitable crush it is an easy thing to annex from the counter a costly piece of lace, a remnant of silk or a few yards of ribbon, and there are many women with wellfilled purses who cannot resist the temptation of stealing a shilling's worth of ribbon at the risk of social disgrace and ruin. Of course, as I daresay you know, nearly all firms employ women detectives, smartly dressed and of ladylike appearance, who mix with the crowd of purchasers, and have a very keen eye indeed for these peculations. These women are regularly employed by the firms, live on the premises, are paid from £1 10s. to £2 10s, p week, and keep an eye as much on the assistants as on their customers. The tricks of the male shoplifter are much more varied and subtle than those of his female rival. A very commen practice is to carry a stick or umbrella with a hollow receptacle at the top. A spring releases the silver or gold-mounted top; the stolen article, which must naturally be small as it is valuable, is slipped into the padded hollow and the top sprung back again

A very skillful thief made a hiding place of the hollow part of an artificial forearm, into which he could palm au article with lightning rapidity. One of the latest devices is to wear a glove with a pocket or a series of pockets in the palm, and, while examining small articles of jewelry, rings, broches, gold pendants, and so on, to slip one or more into the concealed pocket by a practiced movement of the fingers. Another trick is to carry some adhesive substance in the palm of the gloves, and by carelessly resting the paim on an article of jewelry to remove it. The opportunities for exercising these tricks while the assistant's back is turned, or while he is at tending to another customer, are many But much shoplifting is done with the help of a confederate, who strolls in casually while No. 1 is making his purchases. One or two valuable articles are handed to the second customer, who is apparently quite a stranger to No. 1, and, if the latter is suspected and searched, of course, nothing is found in his possession. Of till robberies, with smeared and hookened sticks, of false alarms which draw the shopkeeper in pursuit of imaginary thieves, leaving the real pilferer free to do his work, and of the hundred and 10 cents and 25 cents, at ever stores. one other artifices, it wol most a volume to sneak. one other artifices, it would require al-

THE MARKETS.

Wall Street Review.

New York, Feb. 5.—The stock market was subjected to a novel process of digestion today and came through the ordeal remarkably well. Stocks which were leaders in activity each strengthened during the movement of last week were heavily sold to take profits. The profit taking was met by so considerable an outside demand that offerings were absorbed with little diffiguity and without any material concession in price being made necessary. Indeed any approach in prices to Saturday's level resulted in a notable hardening in the market the surface becoming practically unyielding at Saturday's level. Offerings of stocks fell to a minimum and buyers in order to secure stocks were obliged to raise their bids to a point to yield profits to the sellers on their last week's purchases. While professional operators were thus taking profits at some points in the list they were replacing their funds in other stocks which had not moved last week or in which the movement had been only inaugurated thus with trading proceeding on an active scale and the movement of prices taking on a considerable degree of irregularity, the market presented all the characteristics of a true bull movement. Upward movements in prices were easily achieved and the speculative sentiment showed itself quick to respond to any stocks. The leaders of the railroad list were the Norfolk and Western stocks, new developments regarding special the common advancing 2% and the preferred 1½. Louisville, St. Louis and San Francisco, Denver and Rio Grande and a number of other railroads responded to good statements of caraings. The iron and steel saceks continued very prominent and the leadership here was shifted also, under the influence of realizing in American Steel and Wire and some others. The new leader of the group was National Steel, which was very heavily bought on floating reports of enormous carnings for the past year to be shown by the forthcoming annual report. Reports of similar kind have been unheeded for past months in Wall street
