THE SCRANTON TRIBUNE-THURSDAY, MARCH 8, 1900.

ISS BERTHA GALLAND made whenever he brought Miss Galland to the her New York debut Tuesday fore the applause was redoubled. She esfore the applause was redoubled. She es-tablished herself with a bound. Few night at the Criterion theatre, where she appeared with

James K, Hackett, in "The Pride of Jennico." The New York critics in yesterday's papers devoted considerable space to a review of Miss Galland's work. Clement Scott said in the New York Herald:

There was considerable interest taken in the appearance of a new actress, Miss Bertha Galland, who was intrusted with Bertha Galland, who was intrusted with as fine a melodramatic character as the modern stage has seen. Marie Otilie, Princess of Dornheim, has a bit in her of all the best Shakespearean and other poetic characters. She is the high born lady who makes desperate love to Basil Jennico in the guise of her own waiting maid.

n aid. Thus equipped for comedy, tragedy, melodrama-what you will-this waiting maid Princess has the elements in her of nearly all the brilliant women we have nearly all the brilliant women we have loved on the stage. She is Beatrice, she is Viola, she is Nerissa, she is Julia, she is Pauline, each and every one of them by fits and starts. It is a part that any netress of the first class would leap at, for all the art of which she is capable is maded in her would be and is packed up in a very small parcel. Now Mise Bertha Galland has evident tulent. She is full of enthusiasm, she is bound to come to the front, but at presher task. ent she has much to learn as she has to ent she has much to fearn as she has to unlearn. She has been badly taught and persuaded that artificiality is preferable to nature on the stage. She has to enact a waiting maid, a confidential zervaat, but she is never anything but a princess for half a second. No one can be deceived by her. Ever rescless, she is such as they are, will doubtless be not still or natural for five minutes togrown.

gether. It is all acting, acting, acting She turns up her eyes and addresses her aentiments to the tennost gallery. All her coquetry is displayed by "kittening" about the stage and making faces behind a fan. This may be done now and then. but when repeated it becomes tedious evening said: and bad art.

However, the talent is there; the experience will soon come, and the great improvement requisite is moderation, discipline and courage not to do too much. Such a part is a severe trial for a young and she is really so clever that d like to see her trained in a chool where comedy does not border on farce, and where voice, style and dir-tinction can wring tragedy out of melo-

Alan Dale said in the New York Journal:

Journal: James K. Hackett as Basil Jennico was very tail and manly-I believe "manly" is the correct expression. His lovemaking always seems to me a trifle cold. Bend-ing like the leaning tower of Pisa, he topples over his sentiment. His height seems to be against him. A large iclele would do as well. But Mr. Huckett speaks well. Although his work in the play is not to be compared to what he did in "Rupert of Hentzau." he had, 1 believe, a fair amount of appreciation. The lady in the case was Miss Bertha Galland, apparently new to us, very more real. to see stage productions from the fertile brain of Charles E. Blaney, all of which have been of a farce comedy line, that the Chinese-American play. apparently new to us, very "King of the Opium Ring," a stage pic charming, very clever, very tempera-mental, and a distinct acquisition. But Miss Galland must rid herself of her litture which portrays the more serious side of life, and of which he is coauthor, and which will be produced at the affectations-her incessantly tripping aughter, her over-claborated "stage bus-ness," and a certain amount of insincer-ty. I am quite aware that Miss Galland will be gushed over, and told that she is quite the nicest thing that ever hapened. She is, indeed, extremely nice, ut she has still a good deal to learn. After the unabridged frigidity of Mr. said:

Hackett, however, Miss Galland was eminently welcome. This young woman looks like Marie Tempest. She will not

HEADACHES OVERCOMES and in this piece she plays a young prin-cess who disguises herself as her own maid in waiting and wins the love of the HABITUAL CONSTIPATION young master of Jennico. Miss Galland made a very great hit. In the first act she seemed rather artificial and lacking in real dramatic worth. But as the play pogressed, and the part in which she ap-peared grew more serious, she rapidly impoved and became more absorbed in 40 GET ITS BENEFICIAL EFFECTS, egret her appearance in this play. The following is culled from the Sun's criticism:

Mr. Hackett is excellent in that kind of action, and it must be made a matter of record that he won the approval of as the an audience as the Criterion ever held. His sweetheart was Bertha Galheid. His sweetneart was bertha Gal-land, by whom the audience was capti-vated completely. She was crude and artificial, but she had a dimpled pretti-ness and a spirited dash which swept away all thought of criticism except in who were there for that especial purpose.

The New York Times contained the fellowing:

If there is any fault to be found with "The Pride of Jennico." it is in the first two acts, when there is a disposition on the part of Mrs. Richardson and Miss Furniss to be rather talky. There is a hint of much action and stir to come, but there also seemed danger that an audi-ence would be tired before the piece de resistance was served.

it is due to the carnest work of Mr. Hackett and Miss Galland that this die not become a settled fact, and that the audience was patient was shown by the way in which they rewarded the actors in the last half of the play. Mr. Hackett and Miss Galland being called before the curtain five times, and the star being ompelled to make a speech, which made im all the more popular.

. . Hackett came before the curtain many times during the tempest of ap plause that followed the stirring climax to the third act. He thanked his wellwishers for the figurative "slap on the back for the present encouragement for the future" they had given to him, "a
