One of the most popular of the companles, playing at the Academy, the Gibney-Hoeffler combination, opened a week's re-engagement there last night with a well-staged and cleverly presented production of "The Woman In Black," one of Jacob Litt's big successes. Neille Gibner in the title role and Morgan Gibney, as Krautzner, a Bowery political boss, did work of a very commendable character. The cast as a whole is above the average. Between the acts high-class vaude-
