OUR PARKS.

In the reorganized park commission, Chairman James Thompson, of select council succeeds G. F. Swigert, Comrades Chase and McHale, of Pos J. 187, Grand Army of the Republic, succeed Alva Daley and Josiah Vandermark. Mayor Kilpatrick was elected president and J. M. Alexretary, treasurer and superintendent. It was decided to have the arch lowered ten feet, so as to be more syrietrical and to have the cannons recently received mounted on wheels. As soon as possible the park walks will be paved also. The parks will be given the same diligent care this year that they have received here-

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

The joint building committee of councils met last evening and formulated a report favorable to the erection of a $1,000 hose house for the Cottage hose company. Dr. Fletcher's was the only dissenting voice and he will be a very vigorous protest against the project. However, it is said by those in aposition to know, that nough votes are sure to carry the years and the merit of which is not manimously recognized.

About three years ago my wife had an attack of rheumatism which confined her to her bed for over a month and rendered her unable to walk a step without assistance, her limbs being swollen to double their normal size. Mr. S. Maddox insisted on my using Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I purchased a fifty-cent bottle and used it according to the directions and the next morning she walked to breakfast without assistance in any manner, and she has not had a similar attack since. -A. THEATRICAL.

"The Dairy Farm."

New York state half a century or so ago, began Merron, who wrote the play and enacts the leading role in it most cleverly.

The scene of "The Dairy Farm" is laid in Hurley, a quaint one-street village in Ulster county, New York. The time is ante-bellum. The characters are of the sort that crystallize in simplest country life. Nathan Newkirk is the nephew of Squire Hurley. The squire takes ocision on Christmas eve to announce to his kins, the village heiress. The squire has ac quaisted the young man with his wishes, but he has neglected to draw out the young man on the subject. This an excellent opportunity and the young man embraces it. He says, as politely as the strained situation admits, Miss Perkins being present, that he declines an honor the heiress has not yet granted him, and introduces instead the girl whom he intends to make his wife. She is Lucy Krum, the discarded nicce of the village miser. Squire Hurley flies into a very unbecoming temper. He says such unexpected things that the guests leave in a body and soon after-ward Nathan Newkirk and Lucy Krom go forth, hand in hand, into the world, to seek their for tune. It proves a good fortune. Nathan New kirk has become a newspaper man-a rising law yer and active politican. He has espoused the cause of the Free Soilers and comes back to Hurley to speak for John C. Fremont which he Rev. Mr. Godshall is attending the Methodist Episcopal conference at Owego, N. Y., and in consequence there will be no service at the Methodist Episcopal conference at the Methodist Episcopal conference at the Simor. Krum is about to fereclose a mertages on Squire Hurley's home, "The Dairy Farm." Simon Krum and Nathan Newkuk have a bitter quarrel. Krun is found dead an hour Episcopal church next Sabbath. He later with his skull crushed in by a healy has given the best satisfaction, and the citizens here of all denominations will suspected of the murder. Now begins that quick unravelling which Providence works out in two or three decades, but play wrights accomplish in as many seconds. The fugitive slave who Simon Krum has re-sold into bondage appears and tells the people of Hurley that he killed the miser. lively Araminta turns good fairy and produces a tin box belonging to Simon Krum, which she had hidden in a forgotten moment of mischief, two years before. There were documents in the tin box which proved that the mortgage on the Dairy Farm was fraudulent. Nathan and his wife come in just at the moment and forgive and are forgiven by the squire. Miss Perkins' pride, re cruelly humbled two years before, is rehabilitated by her bethrothal to the village dominic.

The play is in four acts, all elaborately staged A fine company headed by James H. Wallick presented the play last night. Besides Mr. Wallick and Miss Merron some of the most capable members of the company were Jean Clara Wal-ters, Edwin Meyer, Katharine Carlyle and Seymour Stratton. The play will be again pre-sented at the Lyceum tonight.

A Renowned Company.

The Paiges, accompanied by their own com-pany, comprising eighteen dramtic and vaudeville artists, will open a week's engagement at the Academy of Music, Monday, April 23, presenting a change of bill at each performance. The company is strongly recommended by the press and the theater management throughout the west as one of the best popular price attractions in as one of the best popular late attractions in that section. The play selected for the introduction of the company to Scranton's theater goers is the strong melodrama, entitled "Two Nights in Rome," a performance that is calculated to please the most blase. Lillian Paige will interpret the role of "Stephanie," and be supported by a cast who are specially adapted to their repoetive characters. "Two Nights in Rome" i one of the strongest acting bills in the company's reportoire, and is constructed in such a manner as to please every lover of dramatic work. Al-though a spicy vein of comedy runs throughout the plot there is said to exist none of the socalled "horse-play" in its make-up. In addition to presenting notable dramatic creations, the operany will offer a continuous performance. In other words, those usual tiresome curtain waits will be entirely eliminated by the introduction between acts of eminent vandevillie artists. Prices, 10, 20 and 30 cents except Monday night, on which occasion ladies will be admitted to best

HE KNEW THE SEX.

For the first time in his life Fred Maxwell was in love, and, like all first attacks, it was a serious case. It was of the kind that made him forget the hours for meals, and even the existence of his fond parents was a vague thing in his mind.

Aside from his neglect of his parents, Fred forgot he was a member of juvenile base ball club; his cherished foot ball courted spider webs in a dark corner of the basement, and he abented-mindedly gave away all of his marbles to his little cousin. And even his new watch was inspected only two or three times daily. But he was in love, and the first time at that.

And then, one day, the bright tints on the sky of his early love changed to a gloomy, dark woolly green sunset, and his bubbling affection was pierced by many pangs of jealousy. His sweetheart began to show signs of fickleness; she proposed to "shake him" because he was what the boys were pleased to specify "dead slow."

In his distress Fred turned to his bachelor uncle, who was versed in the ways of the world and most things in it, and in him the boy found a sympa-thetic and cheerful listener, whose solemn countenance never once betrayed a line of mirth while the tale of woe was unfolded.

"You see," Fred explained, "Deloise, who is my girl, was at a party last night and Charlie Mack was thick with her. There were lots of games with forfeits and she paid several with him, but I didn't say nothing until, during a game of 'postoffice,' I heard her and Charile canceling stamps outside the door like everything. Afterward I told her it wasn't fair, and she laughed at me. Then we went home." "Did you kiss her going home?" his uncle inquired.

"No: I didn't have a chance." "Were you not alone with her?" 'Yes, but-" "Did you kiss her after you reached her home?" No." "Why didn't you?" "Well, the electric light is too bright near there."

"Humph! Isn't there a tree or elephone pole in front of her house?" "Yes, but what-" "Couldn't you have sneaked the girl into the shadows and kissed her as she wanted you to?" "But how do you know she wanted ne to kiss her?"

His uncle gesticulated to high heaven. "Didn't you notice that she looked up o the windows and remarked that the olks were all in bed and asleep? Didn't she scan the street closely and then edge softly into the darkness of the electric light shadows and become WANTED-GOOD, BUSTLING MAN FOR PARTsilent as if she had some great problem on her mind?"

"I believe so, but I didn't think-" "Of course not; you are not a chump, but you are atrociously young. "And today." Fred hurried on, for e was anxious to get away from the nemories of the previous night and opportunities lost, "she sent me a note n school with another one from Charlie Mack, and-but I'm going to lick him!" "What for?" his uncle asked. "For trying to steal my girl."

"O! But how do you know he is at empting such grand larceny? And ar you sure you can whip him?" Fred produced two notes in answer to the first question and sniffed at the Deloise's letter:

Dear Fred: I have got an offer from Charlie Mack, asking me to be his girl, and I may accept him if I don't get any more. I won't de ride, though, for two or three days. Didn't we have a fine time at the party? Are you going to Bertha's party on Saturday night? I've go to get my history lesson, so good by. Yours with Her succinct "offer" from Charlie

Dear Deloise: Please accept the offer of being Yours truly, Charlie Mack. "Now what am I to do?" Freddie asked, but his uncle had suddenly dis covered a frog in his throat and gonchoking from the room. Thursday night Freddie again camo his uncle with a letter in his hand and a tearful countenance. His uncle took the letter and read: Dear Fred: I've accepted Charlie's offer be cause it came first and am going to Bertha's party with him Saturday night. Are you mad?

votte and tell me so if you are mad. I must harry now and get my rhetoric lesson Good byc. In haste. Deloise. P. S.-Be sure and let me know if you are mad "Young man." Freddie's uncle began, after he had read the letter, "you possess a prodigious quantity of love and a deplorable absence of finesse. This young woman, true to the instincts of her sex, is leading you a chase, and you now have the chance of giving her 'a run for her money.' Take your pencil and I'll dictate a letter which you'll afterward copy and send to her temorrow in school." "My Dear Deloise," her uncle dictated, "by all means go with Charlie; he is a good fellow, and I hope you'll go with him a long time. Mad? Of course not. Why, the idea! I shouldn't think of minding a nitle thing like that. Always your friend, Fred Maxwell. "But, Uncle eGorge, I don't understand it." Freddie protested. "I dare say you don't," his uncle retorted. "But the girl will. She is several years in advance of you in comprehension.

Friday night Freddie informed his uncle that Deloise walked beside him from school and scarcely noticed her "accepted fellow." Sunday morning he came bustling into his uncle's room with beaming face and excitement sticking out all over him.

"I went home from the party with Deloise last night, and Charlie Mack is awful mad. He took her there, and sat beside her all the evening. She followed me all around, and we ate supper together. Charlie followed us home, but we ran around the house, and I kissed her when we got in the doorway. And she said she was only joking about being Charlie's girl." Uncle George smiled-a peculiar smile. He knew the sex. Before the church bells had clanged that morning, Charlie's little brother came to the back door and gave Freddie the following note:

Fred Maxwell: If you want to fight, meet me helind old Stevens' wood pile. Yours truly, Charlie Mack. From his window Uncle George watched his nephew meet the rival behind the woodpile. He saw their lips move, arms wave and feet stamp. Presently a finger was agitated in close proximity to a face, and the acprecipitated a blow, which was When outckly followed up by many, the meeting had resolved tself into a series of blows, kicks, bites, "wrast-ling," and hairpulling Uncle George resumed his Sunday paper, remarking to himself, "Well, there's a woman in it as usual."

And he smiled again-he knew the Five years later Deloise stood at the
