E. Davis, of Middle street, yesterday, AT THE MASQUERADE BALL.

She Thought She Was Concealed, but a Wide-Awake Youth Knew Her.

From the Chicago News. This is the story of a young man who went to a masquerade way over on the west side, where his tender susceptibilities were gently awakened, en-snared in the meshes of a hasty love, but rejected, trampled upon and crushed and beaten up into an embittered frappe of anguish memories all in one

He was a nice young man and wore and an uncomfortable dress suit that but whose component parts obstinately persisted in having a sort of some thing-the-matter-with-it look that raised a suspicion of its having been borrowed for the occasion

Among the dancers in the stuffy throng his eye lighted upon one of particular exception. She was a fine dancer and dressed in a neat and pretty costume and her eyes gleamed out rapturously from behind the alluring enticement of a mask of glaring red. Petite and svelte in figure, she barely rose to his shoulder, and, seeking her out, he asked for a dance.

She readily assented and laughed, so charmingly that each ripple brought an answering reflected glow upon his face, and after awhile the giddy whirl and the babel of music and noise raised such a tempest of curiosity within him that he endeavored to see who she was "Oh, no!" she cried, in consternation, grabbing the concealing mask with both hands.

"Well, now, that's mean," he said. But just then there came a scurrying among the dancers who trooped out upon the floor and stood expectantly ooking at the leader, who stood upon the music platform, watch in and, "You see," he said; "it's time for un masking, anyhow, "Unmask," came the sharp command, with accompanying shricks of laughter from the merry throng and the young man turned triumphantly toward his charmer.

But just then a jumbering youth of about 17 slid excitedly across the floor and burst between them. "Hello, ma!" he said, grabbing her by the arm. "You couldn't fool me-I knew you all right!" And the young man with the high collar, white choker and questionable dress suit stood as in a hypnotic dream. He turned faint and sick at She was about 40 years old and looked like the quintessence of a season's sour crab-apple crop, and the young man gave a heart-rending groan, faded into the crowd and went

THEATRICAL. The Sawtelle Company.

The Sawtelle Dramatic company opened a week's engagement at the Academy of Music last evening by the presentation of the five-act miltary drams, "The Victorian Cross." The scene of the piece is laid partly in England and partly in India during the Sepoy mutiny, and deals with the legitimate and illegitimate sons of an English baronet who are both claiming title to the estate. The usual love story runs through the play, which also affords opportunity orthe display of laccoism, terrific combats, thrilling rescues, hair-broadth escapes, etc.

The company is beaded by Miss Jensie Saw-telle, who depicted the begins. Her best acting was done in the scenes calling for light comedy, to which she seems especially fitted. Harry English was the hero, and Charles W. Guthrie is the illegitimate son, was a sufficiently sinister The comedy element was supplied by John E. Brennan and Florsie Sinnett, who also introduced some clever specialties between the acts. Last night's performance was greatly chjoyed by a large audience.

At today's matinee "Country Courselip" will be be presented, and in the evening, "Lost at Sca"

"Lord Byron" Tomorrow Night. The success of the new play, "Lord Byron," which is being presented by James Young and an excellent company of players, is to some the extent a success of spectacle. From beginning to end the stage is a blaze of perfectly harmonized color, and the period to which the play belongs, and the fact that two scenes are laid in Mayfe's London, and two in Greece—Lyceum.
