SOUTHERN TEXTILE MILLS. Great Progress of the Industry from Virginia to Alabama.

From the New York Sun. All visitors to the southern states, as they travel along the railroad lines, are surprised at the number of cotton mills they see after they have first entered the cotton belt. Some of them are on the banks of the rivers where they utilize water power; others at crossroads or in the cotton fields where they depend upon steam. The Southern railway has just collected the most recent statistics about the growth of textile industries in the south and find that last year there was a gain of 13,096 looms and 422,649 spindles in the southern mills.

The cotton acreage this year will be the largest on record and it will not fall far short of 26,000,000 acres. Cotton raisers also expect good prices, for last year's crop in India was almo total failure, ours was small, and the present Egyptian crop is not promising. So this season is expected to be boom period, both for cotton raiser and the textile manufacturer in the

In towns along the western parts of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama there are now about one hundred mills either building or to be built this season. Many of them will be plants of large capacity and their machinery will start before the close of the year. There are now 366 mills in operation, including forty-seven knitting and forty-six woolen mills. There are 95,316 looms and 3,332,607 spindles. The south is not yet utilizing its abundant water resources as it might do, though 112 of these mills, or about a third of them, are run by water power, supplemented in soma cases, however, by steam. Electricity is used in a few mills, but steam is most utilized. Towns, like Augusta, Ga., with abundant water power, depend upon water almost entirely.

Of the cotton mills now in operation, twenty-five are in Alabama, forty-four in Georgia, two in Kentucky, two in Mississippi, 123 in North Carolina, which is the banner cotton manufacturing state of the south, sixty-five in South Carolina, nine in Tennessee, and three in Virginia. The cotton mills turn out all kinds of common fabrics. such as sheetings, tickings, prints, shirtings, drills and so on, and a of them produce the finer kinds of otton cloth. The knitting mills manufacture a great deal of hostery and are looking for a big crop of 8 and 10 underwear and among the woollen mills, one South Carolina plant makes ingrain carpets and art squares while others produce all sorts of cloth for suitings, as well as blankets and flan-
