MONROE COUNTY COURTS

Judge Craig Holds Regular Sessions at Stroudsburg.

Special to the Scranton Tribune. Stroudsburg, Pa., May 31.—Judge Alvin Craig is holding the regular term of court this week.

At 3 o'clock this afternoon the grand jury, after two days' deliberation, ignored the indictment of murder against Lydia Hiller, who is charged with killing her baby, but brought in a true bill for "concealing of the death of a child."

For stealing a few bottles of whiskey and some cigars and breaking a cash register with a few dollars in it, John Lurch was sentenced by Judge Craig to five years' imprisonment in the Eastern Penitentiary. When taken back to jail Lurch said to Sheriff Fisher: "I won't serve five days of my sentence. I will kill myself."

Judge Craig has ordered and decreed that the question of building a poor house be submitted to the voters of Monroe county at the general election to be held on Tuesday, the sixth day of November. Some weeks ago the new owners of the Stroudsburg Jeffersonian, the only Republican paper in Monroe county advocated the erection of a county poor house. It was shown by the new owners of the paper that the condition of the poor could be very much improved by the erection of a county poor house. A petition was recently drawn up and twenty overseers of the poor in the county signed the same. It is thought that the voters of the county will vote largely in favor of the building of a county poor house.

CAMPAIGN LITERATURE. 160 Million Pieces of Literature Sent Out to Win Votes—Special Pamphlets in German, Swedish, Polish, Danish and Hebrew.

L. A. Coddler, in Atlanta's.

It has been said that the distribution of literature has come to be about the most important feature of a national committee's work. This phase of campaigning has reached truly colossal proportions.

The head of the literary bureau of a national committee must be a man of rare judgment, of varied talents, and of unusual executive ability. The head of the Republican literary bureau in 1896 was Perry S. Heath, now assistant postmaster general. The head of the Democratic bureau was Daniel McConville, of Ohio.

Documents were sent out from both headquarters by the ton. The Republican committee distributed over 160,000,000 pieces of "literature." Over 16,000 packages were sent by freight or express, and over 130 carloads of printed matter.

In the shipping department alone 275 people were employed. The distribution by the Democratic committee was not equally large.

The work has been reduced to a science. Each committee has lists of voters which are furnished originally by the various local committees in states and congressional districts, and these lists are so arranged that, so far as possible, they are distributed to the maximum extent and in the most judicious manner.

The list of names is so arranged that the right kind of argument will be presented to each mind. The Republican and Democratic national committees today each have at least 3,000,000 names on their lists. By far the largest proportion of documents presented are speeches in congress which go out under congressional frank, thus reducing immensely the expenditure for postage.

Of such great advantage is that that in the congressional session immediately preceding a presidential campaign many speeches are made which are of great value to the party. Entire books have been inserted in the Congressional Record in this way. In a recent congress, Tom Johnson, the millionaire congressman from Ohio, printed as a part of his speech Henry George's book on "Progress and Poverty," and the great work of hundreds of thousands under congressional frank. Of course, the national committees have to bear the expense of paper and printing.

THE LITERARY MILL. This class of documents is far from comprising all that go out. The literary bureau of a national committee is a great workshop. The Republican committee in 1896 employed twenty-seven writers, most of them specialists in their own lines, and on other topics of a political nature, and these men were kept busy at headquarters constantly preparing timely material as the occasion might demand. Much of this work was sent
