NO RACE COUPSE.

Alumni park will not be turned into a racing ground. At least this is what one of the leading horsemen of the city has said. The scheme has fallen through owing to the lack of funds. The horsemen were all in with the movement at first, but after considering the financial part they halted. The section where the park is situated being undermined and liable to part company with the rest of the city at any time, the horsemen do not care to take the risks, it is said. Stakes had been driven for the new trace course before this decision was reached. It will propably be continued as an athletic park.

TRUE HISTORY OF DE LOME'S LETTER

HOW IT WAS OBTAINED AND MADE PUBLIC.

Discovered by a Cuban Secretary, Who Realized Its Value and Brought It to This Country-Its Publication Resulted in DeLome's Dismissal and Hastened the War.

It will be remembered how the avowals of undiminished friendship between the United States and Spain were repeatedly being exchanged just before the war, despite the incendiary utterances in congress and the passive resistance offered by the Spanish authorities at Havana to the distribution of the rations that the people of the United States were contributing for the relief of the starving "reconcentrados," and how, at this functure, a certain letter, written by Mr. Dupuy Lome, the Spanish minister at Washington, to Mr. Canalejas, a minister of the Spanish parliament, who had gone to Cuba to study the situation there, was made public, its contents causing a great sensation,

This letter, wherein the president of the United States was described as a low-grade politician, was reproduced in fac-simile in the newspapers. After Mr. Dupuy de Lome's acknowledge ment of its identity the matter was taken up by the administration and referred to Madrid, coupled with a request to remove the minister, who thereby became persona non grata, and who received his passports without awaiting the reply from Madrid. He claimed that he had demanded his passports and presented his resignation before this step was taken; but this matters little in the affair, as there J. Corbett, the pugilist, played first is no question of doubt about the removal being solely due to the discovery of the letter. In this he had committed himself in a manner allowing of no explanation, as it was a breach of diplomatic courtesy which could not be tolerated, especially at a period stirred over the Maine explosion it had become difficult to keep it within post office. Others denied this, as letters of that character were seldom fortaken at Havana from the mails by office, this belief being due to the cernoon at 4 o'clock to practice for the autonomist regime then being intro- playing ground and that the Harrisduced in Cuba a considerable number Carnival of Nations will hold a social posts in the government offices, so as in the injunction was denied. The manin the lecture room of the Methodist to be better able to come in touch with ager of the Harrisburg club is indigmovements of the troops, which were being constantly discussed in all Span#### ish circles. WHO OBTAINED IT.

It is now claimed that the person who obtained the letter was not in the employ of the Spanish government; he was, in fact, one of the many people in Cuba looking for work. The story goes that Canalejas, the Spanish minister. had arrived in Havana after staying some days in Washington, and was so busy calling and receiving calls from the officials, political party leaders, office seekers and friends that for some Mesit time after arriving there he could not | find the time to attend to his correspondence. At the end of two weeks mail matter had so accumulated that he realized that he could do nothing without a secretary, and he asked his friend Amblard, leader of the Spanish reformist party, to secure him a person for this purpose, offering him $100 for the work.

A young man called Escoto was recommended for the position, and he pre-sented himself at the Inglaterra hotel, and after the usual preliminaries was engaged by the crown minister. first work, Canalejas instructed him, New York ...... 0 0 0 0 0 2 0 2 *- 4 5 1 would be to assort the letters into Batteries-Callahan and Denohue; Carrick and groups and classify them-political friends, official letters, social, private, office-seekers, etc. He had just commenced his work under his employer's supervision when a political friend called and Canalojas left the room to receive his visitor.

The young man proceeded with his opened letters he took up the parcel of mail that had not yet been touched. He came upon an unopened letter, sealed with the stamp of the Spanish legation at Washington; he waited for a while, but the minister did not return, and after a few minutes' hesitathe letter. After doing this Escoto realized that it was of so great an importance that it would be simply impossible for him to tell Canalejas that he had opened it by mistake. He read the letter over several times, and making up his mind to use it to advantage he put it into his pocket.

ESCOTO'S PLAN.

For four consecutive days his work with Canalejas went on, and in the meanwhile the secretary obtained an introduction to Lascote, the revolutionary delegate in Havana, afterward mayor of that city. He asked for $50 to go to New York and take the letter in person. The matter was considered, and the general opinion among the Havana delegates was not very favorable. None of them had heard of the His father, they discovered, was man. a conductor on an English railroad company in the island, but nothing more appeared to be known about the son. At the same time it was out of the questio to allow a chance like that to escape without an effort being made bring the letter before the government of the United States.

A solution was presented; the man would leave the island with the $50 he had asked for, but he would be accompanied by a person in touch with the junta, and, to avoid his being able to ommunicate with doubtful characters, would be taken to a port where the danger was least. This plan was accepted and the $50 was subscribed by five of the delegation. Escoto, accompanied by a Cuban of the name of Sarrachaga, left for Cardenas, and on inding in New York they were met by Mr. Horatio Rubens, the member of the American bar who made himself ous during the Cuban rebellion by his defense of the filibustering expeditions denounced to the Washington authorities by the Spanish minister.

DENT. Once relieved of the letter, the rest was comparatively easy. After having a photograph taken of the letter Mr. Rubens, Mr. Estrada Palma and Mr.

in bringing it before the president, Escoto was taken to Washington and carefully cross-examined in connection with the whole affair. Everything appearing to corroborate his statements and the handwriting being undoubtedly Dupuy de Lome's, the matter became an affair of state of great moment. The press was informed, the letter was pub-lished in every newspaper in the United States, and was cabled to every capital in Europe. This is the most circumstantial story yet told of the publication of the De Lome letter, and it bears the impress of truth.
